DANGER OF SNAKES.

This country is correctly denominated the "Paradise of the Pacific," and, according to popular statement, it was more of a paradise before the advent of the white man than it is now; for he not only introduced diseases and vices before unknown to the simple islanders, but is also credited with the introduction of scorpions, centipedes, and mosquitos; and everybody knows how much of our evening discomfort is due to the last-named little pests. There is one thing with which most other countries are cursed, which was not in this paradise before the white man came, is not here now, and we trust never will be during all time to come—that is, snakes. But it cannot be said that there is no danger of those loathsome creatures being unintentionally brought into the country, getting adrift, breeding and multiplying, and in a few years becoming as plentiful as centipedes now are. It is neither impossible nor improbable that live snakes may be unwittingly landed here at any time, concealed in lumber or bales of hay. As a matter of fact, a snake was found in a bale of imported hay in a livery-stable on King street, a few days ago. When discovered it was lifeless, but apparently had not long been so. In like manner there is danger of introducing the living reptile.

A SUMMER RESORT.

Mr. Allen Herbert who laid out Kapiolani Park and was the first settler there has determined to erect cottages on his land there and let them to those wishing to spend a little time at the seaside, more particularly in the summer months. The advantages he offers are, the extensive grounds (nearly 8 acres) beautifully laid out, a fine little harbour, entered by a boat channel large enough to admit the smaller inter-island steamers, and fishing and bathing grounds. A restaurant will be erected on the grounds where visitors can get their meals or have their own supplies cooked.

The matter will be a great boom to our Honolulu community who are not all fortunate enough to own sea-beach lots. We expect to see it well patronized as soon as it is fairly started.

POLICE COURT.

CRIMINAL CALENDAR.

Friday, Aug. 17—Drunk; D. Kaai, fined $5 and $1 costs; J. K. Kaoliko, and Keola, adultery (J) fined $30, and (K) $15, and $1 costs each; J. Young, attempting to leave Kingdom without a passport, fined $5 and $1 costs; Achuck, and Ahook, assault and battery, remanded to 22nd.

LOCAL & GENERAL NEWS.

THE steamer Lehua reports abundant rains on Maui.

THE trains will soon be running again on Beretania Street.

A further portion of the article on New Guinea appears in to-day's supplement.

CAPTAIN Crane reports that on Monday last a severe gale occurred in the neighborhood of Hilo, uprooting the trees.

OUR readers attention is drawn to Captain Nordberg's advertisements in another column.

THE Mission Children's Society will meet to-night at the residence of Mr. Riemenschneider.

SCHOOL street between Nuuanu and Liliha streets is being repaired. It is now being rolled.

THE bridge on Beretania Street near Keeaumoku Street is being thoroughly repaired and re-planked.

YESTERDAY a new brick and cement pavement was laid in front of J. M. Oat jr. & Co's and Kraefts' stores.

THE Road Supervisor reports that the new road roller works splendidly and is greatly in advance of the old one.

MESSRS. Lyons & Levey will sell on Monday, at 10 o'clock at 57 Merchant street, household furniture, etc.

MESSRS. Kohm & Rupprecht are frescoing the upper part of the walls and part of the ceiling in the second story of Kamakapili Church. As far as it has gone it looks very handsome.

THIS afternoon at 4:30 o'clock Mr. H. J. Nolte will have his Orchestrion playing in the Beaver Saloon to make up, in a slight way, for the absence of the Band. All are invited to come.

YESTERDAY some one took the dead body of the snake which had been found in a bale of hay at the Hawaiian stables and laid it in the road makai of the Government Buildings. A number of people thought that it had got loose from some place and been run over.

ON Wednesday, and Thursday nights about twenty of the volunteers went up to the top of Punchbowl and had target-practice. The custom will probably be continued monthly. It is about the most sensible thing in connection with the volunteers that we have yet heard of.

YESTERDAY morning a Chinaman went into J. T. Waterhouse's store to buy a quarter's worth of buttons. While so doing he stole a dollar's worth. He was arrested and taken to the Station House and searched when, not only the buttons, but opium was found on him. He was therefore locked up on two charges.

THE Grand Louvre of Brussels is now formally open, and Mr. C. Michiels and Mr. Block, are ready to attend courteously on all visitors. In taking a look round yesterday we especially noticed his fine quality satin-lined gent's suits, the beautiful hand-made Brussels, Duchess, Spanish, and point laces, and lace fans, the embroideries, the rich stock of silks, satins, Surah silks, silk handkerchiefs, and lace curtains. Trunks, of all sizes, and valises help to make up one of the choicest stocks in Honolulu.

IT appears that of late at the Chinese Theatre the actors have been in the receipt of letters which they style insulting. On Thursday evening a young Chinaman was going over King Street bridge to the Theatre when he was accosted by another who said, "Where are you going." On being told, he was asked to take a letter along. He did so and two of the actors on reading it violently assaulted him so that Dr. Brodie had to be sent for. Yesterday Ah Yim Fong the person who stopped the others, was arrested by the Police. He admits writing many letters before and the envelope of this one but denies that the letter in it was written by him. He seems somewhat crazy.

YESTERDAY a continuation of Hackfeld & Co's great credit sale was held. The attendance was fair and prices rather below expectations.

THE straight ticket at the next election for the Legislature in Honolulu is given as Messrs Lilikalani, Kaulukou, Poepoe, and J. Baker. They expect to be opposed by Messrs Keau, Kawainui, Castle, and Dole. At least so they say.

SOME time last year a Police Commission was appointed, consisting, we believe, of Their Ex.'s J. O. Dominis, and W. M. Gibson, the Hon's. E. Preston, and W. C. Parke, and Captain Hayley. It was said that they met. Certain it is, however, that no report has ever seen the light of day and yet, at the time the Commission was appointed, it was considered an exceedingly urgent matter. What will be done in the matter?

NEW GUINEA.

Well-ventilated houses, good diet, and stimulants taken in moderation were essentially necessary, in his opinion to the preservation of anything like health; and the most useful articles in the medicine-chest were quinine for fever, and cyanite of potassium, bluestone, carbolic acid, and oil for sores. This writer was inclined to think that Europeans could withstand the fatal effects of tropical illnesses better than most dark races, and that consequently in localities where the latter would die the former might have only a passing illness; and that, although the climate of the New Guinea coast could not be called healthy, that on the mountain tops further inland would probably be found otherwise. But even along the seacoast he did not think that much need be feared so long as proper precaution was taken in the manner above mentioned. The west of the Gulf of Papua he pronounced decidedly unhealthy, though high and healthy localities might be found 200 or 300 miles in the interior by means of the Fly River. M. D'Albertis, in a letter to Dr. Bennett, of Sydney, in 1876, stated that, after ascending the Fly for a considerable distance, all the members of his party were very sick with fever, and he found it impossible to cross swampy forests to reach the mountains. In a letter from Captain Runcie, of the London Missionary Society, to Rev. J. P. Sunderland, Sydney, in October, 1876, the writer stated that at Port Moresby he found the condition of affairs rather disheartening. The Rev. Mr. Lawes had lost a son through fever, the rest of the family were and had been suffering from the same disease, and a number of other persons, whose names Captain Runcie mentioned, were also ill. "It seems to be a very unhealthy place," he wrote, "for no one escapes who goes there." The Rev. S. M'Farlane, writing in January, 1876, said he had not found any part of the coast. or any island in Torres Straits free from fever, Cape York and Port Moresby not excepted. On the other hand, Captain Moresby, while he was on ths coast in a man-of-war, found the climate as healthy as any in the world; but then he was probably away from the effects of the malaria arising from the swamps and marshes.

New Guinea produces much that is valuable for sustaining life and promoting trade. Bananas, sugar, cane, yams, taro, and sweet potatoes attain an immense size in the interior. The breadfruit tree, the sago palm, the cocoanut tree, betel, and mango are indigenous. Tobacco is cultivated by most of the natives, and chillies cucumbers, watermelons, vegetable marrows, grapes, and fruit representing the apple, and wild oranges are to be found. That other tropical fruits and that spices could be produced with ease, there is considered to be very little doubt. The soil and climate are said to be specially suited to the cultivation of coffee, and by adopting the terrace system of irrigation rice might be grown. In open land the cotton tree has been found to be not uncommun. Cocoanut groves are usually seen overshadowing the coast villages of the peninsula. The sago palm is scarce about Port Moresby, but abounds further to the north. In his letter, in 1875, to the London Times Captain Moresby said New Guinea was rich in timber, which ought to form an immediate article of export; and thé yield from the sago palm might be increased so as to form a permanent and paying export. Yams and roots were abundant, and might be cultivated to any extent. But the main source of wealth, he said, was the cocoanut, the value of the copra and cocoanut oil being very great. These products, actually in existence, he considered would be the first support of an infant colony. Tens of thousands of acres of low land could probably be cultivated for rice, cotton and sugar-cane with profit, and jute and other fibres were already growing in the country. The high grass land seemed to his observation to be better watered than the generality of Australian pastures, and would, he thought, afford runs for millions of sheep and cattle. Much of the high land appeared to him to be suitable for coffee culture. The only signs of mineral wealth seen by him or any of his ship's company were some fragments of gold quartz picked up at Fairfax Harbour, Port Moresby; and it is remarkable that no one appears to have seen any gold in the possession of the coast natives. It is generally believed by all persons who have visited New Guinea, that precious minerals exist among the high mountains to the north, but gold appears to be quite unknown to the inhabitants.

On the subject of production, it is well that attention should be given to the letter which the Rev. S. M'Farlane wrote in January, 1876, for his object was to warn people who had any attention of going to New Guinea from expecting too much. A short time previous to his writing a project had been started in Sydney to open up trade between New Guinea and the Australian colonies in the products of the island, and Yule Island had been selected as the site for a settlement. The promoters of the undertaking expected to obtain from New Guinea cocoanut oil, palm oil, sandalwood, mahogany, cedar, ebony, cinnamon, cloves, nutmegs, maize, arrowroot, sago, sugarcane, beche-de-mer, pearlshell, turtleshell, and trepang. "I pity them," Mr. M'Farlane wrote, "if they rely upon anything of the kind, for they will not be able to obtain any one of these things. Even cocoanuts and sugarcane are very scarce on the island and very dear. All may be had on the mainland, no doubt, but will it pay to collect them? For cocoanuts they must go to the west; for sago to the head of the gulf; for spices round to the west and north; for ebony round to the eastern side of the peninsula—where I got some curiosities carved in that wood. For sandalwood and mahogany I do not know where they must go, for I have not seen any on the island..... There is positively nothing to be had on the south-east of the peninsula, so far as we know, which is of any commercial value. Pearlshell and beche-de-mer may be found on the coast, and gold in the interior, as in Australia. Cotton and coffee, &c., may be cultivated, but labour would have to be imported."

Sufficient has been written to show that settlement in New Guinea will not be unattended by danger to health, and even life. Still the knowledge we possess of the island and its capabilities, limited as the area is over which travellers have passed' shows that the difficulties in the way of opening up the country for the residence and industry of Europeans are not insurmountable. That which is required more than anything just now is further information respecting the interior of the island, for it is away from the swampy coast land and in the vicinity of the hills and mountains where the necessary aids to health and prosperous settlement must be found. At the same time one of the many writers upon the subject of New Guinea has pointed out that people should not be diverted by "piecemeal exploration of the malarious, unhealthy coast of South New Guinea from the true home of the future white inhabitants on the eastern and north-eastern shores of the island." Mr. Macleay, writing to the "Herald" after his expedition in the Chevert, said that he was satisfied from his own observations, and from what he had heard from pearlshellers and others who had visited various parts of coast, that dread of hostility from the natives need be no bar to the exploration of New Guinea.

The intercourse which had sprung up between people engaged in pearlfishing and the black Papuans, from Bampton to Deliverance Island, showes that the hostility to strangers hitherto ascribed to these people was not in accordance with fact, while as to the yellow inhabitants of the east coast of the Gulf of Papua, their submission to the presence of M. D'Albertis, their friendly conduct to the missionaries, and their unsuspicious reception of H.M.S. Basilisk, and afterwards of the Chevert, proved that they had no antipathy to the visits of foreigners. The real difficulties in the way of exploration, Mr. Macleay considered, proceeded from the climate and nature of the country. The low-lying weedy swamps which extended from the head of the Gulf of Papua westward to the Dutch boundary line were not only unhealthy but impenetrable, and the interior of this, the most interesting part of the island, could only be reached by findiug some river which could be navigated throughout the whole extent of this enormous delta. The Fly, he believed, would be the river by which this might be effected. The difficulties in the way of exploration on the eastern side of the gulf were, he said, considerably less. The country was more penetrable, the climate tolerably healthy; the distance across the island was very small; and the ambition to ascend the great mountain range would be so stimulated by its proximity and apparent easiness that we might expect before long to hear of this part of New Guinea being thoroughly examined.
