On the night of the 4th, one of two young men occupying a room on the premises of the aleputy sheriff, was startled from his sleep by a hand feeling over him. He clutched the hand which was immediately jerked away and some one passed out of the door, which had not been fastened. Awakening his companion, the two were filled with fear, and withdrew to another room. Later at night, or toward morning, the wife of the deputy sheriff who slept on the floor with a child, near a bedstead, put out her foot and it came in contact with thing that seemed to withdraw. Again she put it forward and again the object withrew, and the operation was repeated a third Lifting now the skirt of the bed she looked under and saw the outlines of, appar-nally, a bundle of clothes; but on closer tiny she made out the outlines of a man. remaing her hushand she left him on d and went to collect some of the neigh-whereupon the depredator was dragged and interrogated concerning his business-had left his hat and part of his clothing or side the door, which was not locked; and withough he pleaded drunkenness as the expla-nation of his strange conduct, it seems he is a noted thief who has already served several terms of imprisonment.

When James T. Brady, the celebrated lawyer of New York, first opened a lawyer's office, took a basement room which had previously e took is basement room which had previously een occupied by a collider. He was some-that annoyed by the previous occupant's cal-ers, and irritated by the fact that he had few is own. One day an Irishman cuttered. "The cobbler's gone, I see," he said. "I hould think he had !" tartly responded firady. "And what do you sell?" said the new-coner, ooking at the solitary table and a few law-onias. "His kheats," responded Brady. "Begorn," said the Irishman, "ye must be the said to the business—ye ain't got but as left."
