In the Steppes of Central Asia
Where the ancestors of Turks and Hungarians came from,
and where Mongols still pasture their herds
In the Puszta, the Steppes of Hungary
The ancient Magyars settled in the wide plains of the middle Danube because they found here the same natural surroundings they were used to in their Asiatic home.

Hides in the sun
A nomad's shelter in the Puszta today as it was a thousand years ago in Asia. Because of their unchanged natural surroundings, the mode of life of the Magyars remained basically the same.
