An Old Virginia Home.

Not the least in contrast to the fashionable rooms of to-day with the open grate of coal or fanciful gas log burning beneath the marble mantel, the luxurious furniture, bric-a-brac, and a room which I visited one evening.

The old-time hospitality is still extended to strangers in old Virginia, and has become proverbial, as in the case of the young man who was invited to spend the day and stay over seven years.

Another object that attracted our attention was the spinning-wheel. Several skeins of yarn were hanging on a peg in the wall, and as there were rolls on the wheel we were given a lesson in spinning.

How St. Louis Lost the Cattle.

In regard to the cold shake St. Louis has received as a cattle market, one of the delegates to the national convention of cattlemen told the following anecdote:

How to Produce a Dimple.

The following is an account of the manner in which dimples may be artificially created: The situation of the depression having been chosen, a small glass tube is placed on the spot, and the air having been sucked out, the protuberance raised is tied about with a fine silk thread, much as an ordinary wart is treated.

OUR FOREIGN COMMERCE.

A clear-seeing correspondent of the Morning Guide puts his finger on the real cause of the present trouble about the currency.

"The Nomad says: 'I would have plenty of it (gold) if I had the equivalent to give for it.' That's it, my wandering prophet!

For the sake of the soundness of his general views, we forgive him his repetition of the well-worn sneer at the cost of the coronation.

The laborer had no privileges except such as his immediate prince conceded. He was absolutely under the control and in the power of his feudal lord and that lord's retainers.

We are not, however, disposed to take a gloomy view of matters. Most of the "accounts rendered," which still hang over our heads, will be duly paid; and as for the others, creditors will have to make the best of them.

With a falling off of 18 per cent in the imports a great decrease in the amount of duties collected might have been looked for.

the articles which yield great sums to the revenue are bonded, and the duty is paid on them not at the time of importation, but when they go into consumption.

Such figures as these are encouraging. If they contain no presage of better times for our chief industries they nevertheless show that the country is no longer "over-running the constant."

General Van Buren's Lecture on the Laborer in Japan.

The annual rainfall has an average of 71.17 inches. The greatest amount of snow that has fallen at Yokohama for one year is 15 inches.

The rainy months are June and September, the former averaging 11.28 rainy days and September 11.85.

The population of Japan is at present estimated at about thirty-seven millions. The census of 1878 shows the males to be between 35 and 36 millions.

The Government of Japan up to 1868 was absolute and irresponsible, with an Emperor at its head, who held all authority by divine right, and who ruled through a number of feudal princes at whose head stood the Shogun (Tycoon).

The laborer had no privileges except such as his immediate prince conceded. He was absolutely under the control and in the power of his feudal lord and that lord's retainers.

There was the widest gulf between the first class and all the others. The latter had no rights which the first-class were bound to respect.

In 1868 the Government was essentially remodelled; the feudal lords were pensioned and their powers taken from them and assumed by the Central Government.

for the maintenance of the military powers. These favorite landed in small divisions to farmers, who held it at the pleasure of the lessors.

Society was there, as elsewhere in Asia, essentially patriarchal. The pater familias had almost unlimited control over all the members of the family.

When a girl left the house of her parents, and entered another as a wife or concubine, all the allegiance due to her parents was transferred to her husband or master, and she was to be obedient to him.

The religion of Imperial families Shin-touism, or the worship of the Empire through its heroes and great men. That of the great mass of the people is Buddhism—not that of India, but a system grafted upon the original pagan worship, and retaining much of the gross superstition of the latter.

The upper lots were purchased by Mr. Macfarlane for a residence, and for the purpose of improvement, it has had great care and cultivation, so that at present it is well covered by a large variety of trees, as well as a choice collection of plants and flowers, all in bloom.

Schools were to be found in the large towns of the provinces and in many of the smaller villages. Where schools were not available, reading and writing were, in some measure taught in the household.

The most highly educated man in Japan knew some thousands of Chinese characters. A few books of the Chinese classics, the books of ceremonies and some of the truisms and proverbs of the Chinese saints, and could write impromptu poetry in Chinese characters.

The lower classes, instead of the Chinese culture, knew just enough arithmetic to serve their daily use, and could read and write in Japanese characters. There was some knowledge of Japanese history, mixed up with the marvelous, gleaned from books or travelling story-tellers, who on the roadside, recited to gaping crowds the stories of the wars and amours of the olden days.

The old system of education has been remodelled since 1868, public schools have been established, and scientific text books from Europe and America have been translated and brought into use.

Little Nell—"I heard Mrs. De Rich say ma was 'quietly dressed.' Did she mean that ma's silk didn't rustle?" Little Dick—"Naw! She meant ma's dress wasn't loud."

The Irony of Fate.

The lower part of this house, as well as the whole of the other one, was occupied by lodgers, most of whom lose more or less of their property.

These thoughts have been suggested by a circumstance that has lately come under our notice.

Mr. Sorrenson's house was insured for $3,000. The damage will amount to $1,500, probably.

The firemen worked with a will, and were efficiently directed by their officers.

Mr. and Mrs. Wale have the sympathy of the community with them in the loss they have sustained.

Three native women—drunks. Two were fined $5 each; one native woman sent to jail for ten days.

R. Gercke accused of assault and battery, remained until the 21st.

William Gilman fined $3 and $3.40 costs for assaulting a Chinaman.

Six Chinamen who were up the first of the week for gaming and released went back to finish their game yesterday and were re-hauled by McIntosh.

An express driver was up for overcharging a customer. He was reprimanded and discharged.

Another had his conveyance standing in the wrong place, and paid a fine of $3, and $3.90 costs.

A Fine Musical and Dramatic Journal.

Friend's Music and Drama reaches us regularly, and always contains a great deal interesting to lovers of art in its highest and most popular form.

In the number for January 24th is a notice of the re-appearance of that great actor Edwin Booth in the character of Iago, in Shakespeare's "Othello."

Our old friend Bandman is "starring" in Western New York. And those who remember his impersonations of historic characters while here two years ago, will not be surprised to learn that he has had a very successful tour while playing "Shylock" and "Richard III."

The Tourists.

The Raymond and Whitney tourists who are now visiting these islands, have returned from their trip to the Volcano, and they express themselves delighted with their journey.

Mr. C. C. Hastings, under whose care the first named party found that the accommodations on the steamer were very good, and the whole trip made much more pleasant, if possible, by the care and attentions of the Messrs. Foster.

The tourists landed at Kealahou Bay, where they had time to visit the Cooke monument. They were then taken on by the steamer to Punaluu landing, where they took the tramcars to Pahala, a distance of five miles.

From there they rode to the Half-way house, 12 miles, in carriages, and after a rest went on to the Volcano House, another 11 miles on horseback.

The ladies enjoyed the novelty of riding "Hawaiian fashion" (that is, astride), and declared it was the only sensible way to sit on a horse (away out in the country, at any rate).

When the party arrived at the Volcano House, they found no one there to receive them, and it was a couple of hours before the manager turned up.

The whole party went into the crater and had a fine view of the lake of burning lava. Those of them who had seen Monsieur Tavernier's picture of the scene declare that the artist has caught the true spirit of the volcano, and that the reality is even more brilliant than the painting.

The party spent two nights and one day at the Volcano, and have come back to Honolulu fully satisfied with the whole trip.

CUPID'S VICTIMS.

INTERESTING REVELATIONS OF A PASTOR'S MARRIAGE RECORD.

Recollections of a Clergyman—Looking Over the Pages of the Record—Some Matches Not Made in Heaven—Entry Cases.

Cupid is a pestiferous fellow. He wounds indiscriminately, as a healer of these wounds recently proved to a youthful and unmarried reporter who sought of him timely fruits of experience. He was a young man, had not been in the business a great many years, but his popularity had not only built up around him a flourishing congregation in the back bay, but had also made his marriages as numerous as those of older ministers. He had married in nine years nearly 900 couples, and had not altogether found it a profitable business. The impetuous entered the matrimonial bonds far more readily than those whose pocket-books warranted "love in a mansion."

It was a curious thing to look through a clergyman's record and read the great variety of occupations with which the names were credited. Among a thousand names there was one that was not ashamed of his occupation. Others thought saloon-keeper, liquor dealer and restaurateur more acceptable ways of putting it. The bartender, after a few years of married life, got into the courts, and the clergyman was then called upon to testify to his being the husband of his wife.

Looking down the page under the head of occupations, the eye saw weaver, miner, wool-sorter, weather-vane-maker, trader, baker, knitter, hairdresser, caterer, mask-maker, and the thought came that their respective occupations fitted them well for the trip into "double life." Then it seemed odd for a clergyman to be married by another, and the thought came that the words author, artist, lawyer, doctor, carpenter, and journalist, because of their rarity among the host. Such occupations as printer, bricklayer, laborer, compositor, merchant, clerk, waiter, farmer, plumber, porter, jeweler, brakeman, paper-hanger, telegraph operator, were noticeable because of their frequency. There appeared to be coachmen who had married without creating a breeze of excitement. In running through the trades the clergyman hesitated somewhat in advertising agent, book agent, and book agent, and made a brief pause at sea captain, baggage-check-maker, circular sawyer, cork cutter, singer, and law student.

"There," he said, "that last one recalls to me the fact that his bride did not know she was to be married till she had entered the room. He said he should pay me on the morrow, but it was several days before I heard from him, and then he applied for a certificate. I refused to give it until he had paid. He did pay finally. Even trackmen, actors, hotel managers, trainers, policemen, medicine dealers, commercial travelers and railroad shifters seek relaxation, and bring blushing damsels to the altar."

"I have sometimes married old women to young men, and I remember an instance in this city. I married an old lady who had been captivated by a young man in the theatre. She lifted him into prominence, and provided him with a fortune. He has been going it like Cain ever since."

It will be a puzzle to the future genealogist to depict a distinct American. "Why," said the clergyman, "I have married Italians, Portuguese, Chinamen and West Indians to American girls. The case of the Chinaman resulted very happily. He was a tea merchant in Salem, and he married an exceedingly handsome girl. He has now two very pretty girls. I have married white women to black men. There is the case of an English girl who took one of the blackest men I've ever seen. They have a happy home, two children, and seem more than contented. I have married Swedes to Americans and Greeks to Americans. I have married a paralytic to a woman who seemed to love the man. I have married men who have died a few days afterwards."

"I am a little shrewder than I used to be. There was a time when I presented a certificate that cost me $1.50 to print, but I look well at the couple before I present the better kind now. There have been grooms who have offered me a quarter, and in scores of instances I have received only a promise to pay. I once received a $1 bill, and this amount was paid by the bride. The highest fee was $25, given me by a perfect stranger. I never marry minors if I know them to be such, and if I have suspicions I always require the consent of the parents."

"The last couple I married were both over 50 years of age. I have unwittingly married dependent children to the marriage ceremony at all hours of the day except between 3 and 5 o'clock in the morning. There is only one class of people who have a special time, and those are the ones who have been brought up under the Church of England. They insist that it shall take place during the forenoon."

"I remember one or two laughable events in my round of knot-tying. On one occasion a great gawky fellow at the completion of the ceremony, in congratulating the bride, told me I presented her many occasions like this, and another, in answer to the question if he wished to be married, said, 'Of course, your reverence; isn't that what I came here for?'"

Detecting the Dishonest.

A conductor on a Broadway horse-car has adopted a novel way of studying human nature. "Every trip I neglect to collect the fare from some passengers," said the ingenious knight of the belt-punch. "I pass the person by as if I overlooked him. I generally choose some one who has already taken the money out of his pocket. When I pass him, I watch and see him slip the money back again, while he looks the picture of innocence. When he starts to get off the car I stop him and ask for the fare. I find that nine times out of ten the passenger either flatly claims that he has already paid, or else asks if he had not already done so. I find that not one person in twenty will voluntarily tender their fare. Of that number two-thirds are women. Of men, laboring men give me the least trouble. The best dressed people are generally the ones who would like best to save their fares."

Natural History.

The most interesting plants are the drosera, or sun-dew, and the Venus fly-trap of North Carolina, that reverse the usual order of things, and live on animal food. The most "advanced" insect in the world is the female spider, that immediately after marriage, devours its husband. The most virtuous animal in the world is the frog, that outdoes the famous Roman tribune, and lives in a glass house. The animal that causes the most frequent mistakes is the mole, from his close resemblance to so many of our friends.

Discovery of Colossal Statues.

An official communication received at the navy department announces the discovery on Rapanui or Easter Island, on the charts in longitude 110 west and latitude 27 south, buried in the depth of the vast wilderness of waters of the south Pacific, of colossal statues and images rudely carved in stone. This remarkable find of archeological remains on a small island hundreds of miles away from any continent puzzles the learned scientists of the Smithsonian Institution and the National museum. Professor Baird says on the subject: "In the present advanced state of ethnological science these monuments are of the highest importance. They will throw light on the somewhat mysterious manner in which this island received its population."

The discoverers of these remarkable remains of a prehistoric and an advanced people in a part of the world synonymous with cannibalism and savage life were the officers of the German gun boat Hyena, while on a trip from Valparaiso to the Samoan Islands. The commander of this vessel, while thus cruising in the south Pacific, subsequently received orders from his government to visit Easter Island and to secure these specimens. The accounts received by our government indicate that the vessel remained at the island but a few days, but during that time the German officers made a considerable collection and made copious notes. The result of their preliminary labors have been embraced in a pamphlet, which is reported at the Smithsonian Institution to contain a large amount of valuable information.

It is reported in the accounts given by the German vessel that the island, which is small, is strewn with large stone images and sculptured tablets. The Smithsonian has offered $1 each for pre-historic skulls with the lower jaw. The few people of Polynesian extraction, who inhabit the island, know nothing about the sculptured remains found in their midst, and even tradition gives no account of a people living there when their ancestors arrived. The study of these remains will add another valuable page to ethnological research. The establishment of a connecting link between these remains and those of America, Asia Minor, and Egypt would indeed add to the mysteries of the pre-historic world.

By Jockeys on a Sore.

Apropos of deplorable sights, I saw one which disgraced the city in which it was permitted. Some of the racing stables are owned by millionaires for sport, others by breeders for legitimate business, and still others by professional gamblers for swindling. In all of them numerous boys are employed as jockeys, and these youngsters are, as a rule, growing up in absolute ignorance of anything good. They live with the horses, and whatever of intelligence they possess above their companion brutes is directed toward vice. It was in a roadside inn near the Jerome Park course that I came upon a party of five little jockeys. Their ages were from 10 to 15 years. They were out on a spree. All were drunk. Their language would burn the paper on which it might be written. They were playing pool for the drinks, which were invariably whisky. Precocious depravity surely never made a sadder showing. Nobody in the circle of adult spectators took the infantile revelers by their ears and led them out. Oh, the scene was much too funny to be disturbed. The blasphemy was so piquant when uttered by such lips the coarse jests so much more diverting than those of men, and the drunkenness so jolly because the inebriates were callow. A box was set for a lad to stand on in attempting a shot. They missed the ball, lost his life, and fell under the table. That raised a roar of laughter, so comical was it to see a 10-year old sot.

Inventing a New Claque.

Everybody who has been to the theatre has felt more or less annoyance at the vociferous applause with which at some theatres the attaches greet certain scenes and the persistence with which they insist upon recalls. This is no part of an attaché's business, and the practice should be forbidden in every well-regulated theatre. The custom, however, has led a witty French paper to make this suggestion: "The claque is composed of the cabinet of the impresario, where they are connected with six levers arranged like the keys of a piano. The sound penetrates through openings under the pit and stalls. After the touching passages in a play the ingenious inventor sets the mechanism in motion, thereby raising the audience to the desired pitch of enthusiasm."

New England Pie.

Pie is the masterpiece of New England home cooking. In Maine they still make those deep apple pies—clove-flavored, generous, ample pies that one can make a flavoured meal of. But pie reaches its apotheosis at the Union club in this city. There an exquisite compound of pastry and the nobles of fruits is brought to tempt the sated appetites of the golden bucks and epicurean judges. The Union club apple-pie is the pie idealized, the justification of Mme. Eve's plucking of the immortal fruit. If she tempted Adam with this price of pies, no wonder he was willing to give up Eden for life on an Asiatic ranch.

All Boston catch of the pie. The broker and banker climb the cafe stool and bolt their pie and coffee. The shop-girl carries in her lunch-box from her brosy boarding house a triangle of pie. The newsboy hath his pie in his mind as he trudges through the storm. Our supreme court judges eat pie with a gusto. I sat beside a supreme judge a few weeks ago at the Massachusetts house in Springfield. If my memory does not fail, the learned lawyer and co-attorney general of the United States ate both mince and peach pie. The Indian in our Massachusetts coat-of-arms holds a pie knife in his hand, and our climate motto, properly translated, reads: "We will have a piece of pie if we have fight for it."

Some Unpaid Election Bets.

The following bets made before election still remain unpaid: About 3,000,000 sweet lives. Several hundred thousands necks. Nearly 10,000,000 boots. Almost 1,000,000 chances of salvation. And about $400,000,000 that were bet but not put up.

There are two things which ought to teach us to think but meanly of human glory; the very best men have had their calculators; the very worst their pants-strings.
