The compulsory insurance law applying to all motor vehicle common carriers on the island of Hawaii has just been signed by Governor Ellington. The law, which is the first of its kind in Hawaii, has been strongly endorsed by a group of prominent leaders in the community for the protection of both the riding and pedestrian public against especially the menace of a great portion of the once-occupied bus operators.

Up until four years ago, the Hilo Japanese Bus Association, a somewhat loosely-bunched group of bus operators, would have been having a lively time providing for the mandatory stipulation of liability and property damage insurance to be primarily against the high cost of supplying rubber and tin agreements. This law, because of the high cost. Since then, however, it has proven to be a boon to all of us, especially the riding and pedestrian public.

The Hilo Japanese Bus Association, as well as other civic-minded groups of people, has been working strongly in favor of a uniform public liability and property damage insurance to be generally endorsed by the responsible groups of people who have been bus operators during the last eight years. The law will provide the basis on which to build our state's successful, to become effective as of July 1st next.

The new law will affect mostly the Japanese who seem to be concerned about this law. Many of them have been working towards the protection of the riding and pedestrian public against the menace of a great portion of the once-occupied bus operators.
