British Warships Sunk In Fierce Fight

GERMAN STUKAS CLAIM HEAVY LOSS FROM BRITISH AIRCRAFT IN FIERCE MEDITERRANEAN FIGHT

German High Command Claims Biggest Sea Triumph Against British Navy

In Present European War

BERLIN, May 27—The German high command, in an official communiqué late today announcing the destruction of the British Mediterranean battle fleet by the German Luftwaffe and the British fleet stationed in that area had resulted in one of the largest victories of all time. The communiqué states that the British fleet had been destroyed and only one destroyer had escaped. The destruction of the British fleet is considered by the British to be a major loss.

HEAVIEST BRITISH LOSS

According to official accounts reaching Berlin from German sources in the battle area, it was claimed that a two-day battle took place in which 4 British cruisers, several destroyers and about a dozen other warships were badly crippled.

The third high command claimed that the British Mediterranean fleet appeared to have suffered the heaviest losses inflicted upon any navy in one engagement since the Battle of Jutland which took place in the last World War. The Nazi Luftwaffe attack, composed of waves of dive bombers, resulted in widespread destruction of the British navy, made up of large battleships and small destroyers.

SATISFIED WITH PROGRESS

Although, meanwhile, it was claimed that the German planes were not able to completely sink all the vessels of the British fleet, the destruction of the British fleet is considered a major victory.

The British high command further added that the Battle of Crete, which included the unexpected victory of the British over the German troops, marks the turning point in the Mediterranean, which has so far shown highly satisfactory results and was progressing according to schedule.

SPECIAL COMMAND ADMIRALS REQUESTED BY U.S. NAVY TO LEAD BRITISH AIR VESSELS

NEW VICE-ADMIRALSHIPS TO BE CREATED BY UNITED STATES NAVAL COMMAND IN WAR ZONES

WASHINGTON, May 22—Observers here were startled and embarrassed the possibility of United States moving to place all three admiralships in the Pacific under the control of the Naval Command responding to the administration's request for the creation of an additional admiralship by the creation of an unspecified number of vice-admirals to command several “task forces” to carry out important maritime missions.

At the presence of the Secretary of the Navy, the vice-admirals who hold commands from which they could not be readily detached.

Special Admiral W. C. Nimitz, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, testifying before the committee said that it was conceivable that ships and planes would be used by the United States to carry out their special task forces to carry out special missions and added that each such force might consist of a division of ships, destroyers, aircrafts, destroyers of a destroyer and a number of submarines. He, however, did not disclose how such task forces might be employed.

The naval spokesman explained that “task force” was an enigmatic word often used to designate a special mission.

ESCAPE FROM HEARTBREAK

by MARGARETTA BRUCKER

Valerie Wentworth, a department store in the northern section of Manhattan, preparatory to her marriage with Phil Prentiss, one of the managers of the store, was on her way to New York, back to the place where she had spent her childhood and youth. The weather had promised rain, and the sky was overcast, but the sun was shining through the clouds, casting a warm glow over the streets.

She was a little tired from her long journey, and her feet were aching from standing in the store all day. She was looking forward to a relaxing evening with her fiancé, and a little shopping.

They had just come out of a cab, and Valerie was carrying her bags and looking around for the store. She saw it, and walked towards it.

The store was a large one, with several floors, and it was crowded with people. Valerie was looking for something to buy, and she saw a dress that she liked.

She went to the counter and asked the salesgirl for the price. The salesgirl told her it was a reasonable price, and Valerie decided to buy it.

She gave the salesgirl her money, and the salesgirl gave her the dress. Valerie put it on, and she was very pleased with it.

She put her bags down, and she started to walk around the store, looking for more things to buy. She saw some other dresses that she liked, and she decided to buy them.

She went back to the counter, and she paid for the dresses. She was very happy with her purchases, and she decided to go home.

She put on her new dresses, and her fiancé was waiting for her. They went home, and they were both very happy with their purchases.

The end.

MUSCLE SHOALS, Ala. — At Muscle Shoals some of the great nitrate-producing experiments during the War, there are developing refinements for both vital wartime products—food and explosives.

More spectacular are the huge plants which produce ammonia accidents for explosive use, but in small, carefully-guarded buildings chemists and engineers are perfecting processes which may make the United States independent of imports for the making of the essential elements. Some of the factories are in being made so that plants when good concentrically for fertilizer and American consumption.

TVY Director David D. Hug is constantly assured that perfect secrecy is being observed. The ammonia is being extracted. In an additional plant, the nitric acid is reduced to nitric oxide, which is used in making either the liquid or the gas plant.

Cheryl Banks: "The TVA experiments were made in the United States in view of the fact that we had to produce our own fertilizer to keep pace with the war demand. We have now completed the plants and we are now making the ammonia that is needed for the war."
