Japanese Anti-Nazis Call for the Use of German Synthetic Oil Patent

TOKYO, June 25—In a speech today, Japanese Premier Shigenori Togo called for the use of the German synthetic oil patent that was revealed to the world last month. The Premier said that Japan should use this technology to produce synthetic oil, which he termed a "key to Japan's survival.

The German synthetic oil patent was revealed to the world by the United States government on May 31, and the Japanese government has already begun negotiations for the transfer of this technology to Japan.

The Premier also called for the strengthening of Japan's military and economic capabilities, and for the strengthening of Japan's ties with other countries.

If their opening bats are any indications of the success in store for them, Yoichi Yatsuka and Dado Marino, former Major League players, have nestled themselves into a colorful professional career. Both hitters were inspired by their inaug­ural bats with impressive home runs and slider straight to the center field. Yoichi Yatsuka picked up much of the early action as he stroked a home run into the left field stands. In fact, he slammed three home runs in the first few minutes before he was counted out.

Bleachers full of fans were the only house to see the action as the members of the district drew to it. Yoichi Yatsuka took his position at the opening hole and played his heart out for the fans. He was to be the first man of the day to record a home run.
