One morning, Janet Cooper, a young woman, was out for a swim in the pool at the hotel where she was staying. She had just found an alerting telegram, left behind by someone who had swum past her. The telegram was signed "Mac," and it was a message of help. Janet felt a sense of urgency, as if she were being called to action.

Janet decided to report the incident to Captain Loring, the chief of detectives. Loring was initially skeptical, but as Janet provided more information, he became more convinced of the urgency of the situation. She explained that the telegram was a message from a woman in trouble, and that she needed help to get to safety.

Loring ordered his men to search the hotel and the surrounding area for any sign of the woman. They found her body in a nearby room, and Loring realized that the telegram had been a cry for help. He was determined to find out who had sent it and what had happened to the woman.

As the investigation progressed, Loring discovered that the woman was a famous actress who had been murdered. The murder had been committed by one of the hotel's employees, who was motivated by jealousy.

Loring and his team worked tirelessly to solve the case, and eventually they were able to arrest the culprit. The case was a turning point in Loring's career, and it set the stage for many more high-profile cases.

The story of the telegram and the murder of the actress became a sensation, and it was featured in newspapers and magazines across the country. It was a lesson in the power of a single message, and it highlighted the importance of paying attention to the world around us.

In the end, justice was served, and Loring was hailed as a hero. He continued to work as a detective, solving more cases and saving lives. And he always remembered the power of a simple message—like the one that had saved Janet's life.
