Despite his impressive victory over Middleweight Champion Billy Soose, George Abrams will not get a crack at the middleweight crown before the new year. Soose, who holds the belt with Billy Soose and is in prom's good books, has agreed to give Soose a title match next month.

Promoter Mike Jacobs explained that his hands were tied with contracts already made.

It was learned that Soose could get a title shot with either champion, but Jacobs holds the option of putting together a title match between the two champions before Christmas.

The contract also calls for a best-of-ten-rounds title match with Jacobs as official arbitrator.

All the more impressive was George Abrams' victory over Soose, who holds two title defenses in the lightweight division.

It was announced by Mike Jacobs that Billy Soose will defend his New York State Middleweight title against Ken Overlin late in September.

Should Soose successfully retain his crown, he may be leveled with the champions. Soose should Ken Overlin retire his belt, Abrams will likely be left standing as the best middleweight in the country, and perhaps the world.

Eight new George Abrams really has an empty victory, for his impressive win over the Middleweight champion, he has only won the right to return to his native state at Jacksonville, Florida from which he hails.

English Troops Practicing Invasion of France

Reliable sources say that English troops may invade the coast of France in the near future. These troops, which are part of the British Expeditionary Force, are conducting training exercises along the French coastline. The purpose of these exercises is to prepare the troops for potential combat operations in occupied territories.

The invasion of France is viewed with concern by the French government. They have already reinforced their coastal defenses to prevent any unauthorized landings. The British, on the other hand, are confident in their military capabilities and believe that they can successfully conduct an invasion.

The French military has also increased their aerial surveillance over the invasion area to detect any incoming enemy forces. Despite the increased security measures, the French remain vigilant and ready to respond to any invasion forces.

The world watches the developments closely, with tensions rising between European powers over the conflict. The potential invasion of France is seen as a significant strategic move that could alter the balance of power in the region.

As the situation unfolds, both sides remain committed to protecting their territories and interests. The outcome of this conflict remains uncertain, but one thing is clear: the stakes are high, and the consequences could be far-reaching.
