A Bit More Than He Can Eat

A colorless guest going down the street one day as he was passing a cafe, he saw a group of people gathered around a small table. As he approached, he noticed that they were eating something that looked like a small loaf of bread. Curious, he asked one of the diners what they were eating.

"It's called potato cake," the diner replied.

The colorless guest decided to try it and ordered one for himself. As he ate, he realized that it was actually a delicious dish made of flour, eggs, and vegetables.

"This is better than what I expected," he mumbled to himself.

From that day on, the colorless guest became a regular at the cafe and often ordered potato cake. He even started to experiment with different recipes and flavors, becoming something of a local legend for his culinary prowess.

HE CHOSE AMERICA!

For many of the returning men, the decision to settle in the United States was not an easy one. Some, like Private Albert de Koninck, had a difficult time adjusting to life in the country.

"I was born in Detroit," de Koninck said. "But I was raised in Belgium. It was a part of me, a part of my identity that I couldn't just leave behind.

"When I returned from the war, I knew I had to make a choice. I could go back to Belgium or stay in the United States. It was a hard decision, but I knew I had to make a choice for myself.

"In the end, I chose to stay in the United States. It wasn't an easy decision, but I knew it was the right one for me."

THE IDLE HOUR ENDS IN FIRE HOUSE

CHICAGO (UP)—The fire station which was headquarters for local police and fire companies in various districts of the city was abandoned today by the American Municipal Association.

The fire alarm didn't work, said the association; they're spending their money on building equipment.

At Fort Wayne, Ind., firemen built two emergency trucks last year, starting with nothing but the chassis. The construction, done in the department shop, saved the city thousands of dollars.

Painters, mechanics and others from fire department ranks combined to remodel two fire houses at Fort Wayne.

At Toledo, the fire department built a 250-gallon pump last year, and plans similar ones for a new year. An old hose cart will be modernized.

These civilians and six firemen are employed in a fire equipment division at Toledo in one of the nation's largest building fire halls.

Elmwood Park, Ill., regular and volunteer firemen staged a drive, raised $500 and with the proceeds bought a 500-foot practice truck. It took them two months between two fire calls.

Insgesamt, fire fighters of the Borough of Warren, Pa., took a one-ton delivery truck and built a boiled water system.

The new car which can also be converted into an emergency ambulance. It will be useful for special calls such as grass, rubbish, or automobile fires and for coal cars.

The city council at Claxton, Mich., bought a ten and a half dollar and the volunteer fire department built it up into a fire truck with an enclosed body. It cost $1,890.
