THE FLOWER OF HAWAII.

BY MIRIAM MICHELSON.

The bellboy was funny. "Shall I take your card up to the Princess, or shall I announce you?" he asked, after inwardly debating the proprieties in the case.

One would imagine a bellboy at the Occidental to have had experience enough of South Sea royalty to decide such a weighty matter quite readily. But it is evident that this island Princess is to be treated with all ceremony. The bellboy finally compromised by deciding to do both of the things he had suggested. So when the time appointed for my interview with Princess Kaiulani arrived the boy walked magnificently before with my card, I waiting discreetly. And then, after a decent and respectful interval, he showed me into the pretty sunny parlor, filled with flowers, announcing my presence in a loud, grave voice.

If I were Princess Kaiulani and by any strange chance to inherit the throne of Hawaii I should straightway take that bellboy into my service, for such gifts as his are wasted in an ordinary, every-day republic. There is something monarchical about him.

"I hope you'll pardon my keeping you waiting," said Kaiulani as I entered.

"I think it ever so kind of you to see me at all," I answered, laughing. "You must hate reporters."

"Oh, you know, I see so few of them," she said, naively.

Trust Papa Cleghorn for that. That courteous, white-haired old diplomat, with his bushy eyebrows and shrewd eyes, stands guard, always most polite; firm enough, though, on occasions, and keeps the reportorial dragons from devouring the beautiful Princess.

And she is beautiful. This royal Hawaiian girl needs not the exaggeration of newspaper gallantry. Of all her portraits there is none that does justice to her expressive, small proud face. She is exquisitely slender and graceful, quite tall and holds herself like a Princess and like a Hawaiian. I know no simile more descriptive of grace and dignity than this last.

Kaiulani had just come from a luncheon given in her honor by friends. She was dressed in a close-fitting black tailor-made gown, braided in black. At her throat, peeping from the top of a high collar, and at her wrists black chiffon was pleated softly. She wore but one ring, a very simple one. Her very pretty black hat flared not too much and was relieved by puffs of white chiffon. Her clothes said Paris. Her accent said London. Her figure said New York. Her heart said Hawaii.

"You've been down there lately, they tell me," she said. "Fancy your having seen it since I have. It's eight and a half years now since I left. Aren't the islands lovely? Didn't you find them lovely?"

"The waterfalls tumbling down into the sea—" I began.

"Yes!"

"And the harbor of Honolulu as the ships come in—"

"And the mountains—"

"Actually covered with tenderest green from summit to the water's edge," I said, interrupting royalty shockingly. "Have you seen anything anywhere else lovelier?"

"No, I haven't," she said. "I really ought not praise my own country—"

"Why not? Surely no one is in a better position to praise than the one who knows the person or thing best."

"Well, Switzerland is beautiful—but different. No, I have never seen any place more beautiful than the islands" And aren't the people hospitable and kindly—the Hawaiians? Didn't you find them so?"

In answer I told the Princess about a "luau" a native feast, to which I had been invited at Hilo. She smiled at my enthusiasm over the flowers and the winning softness of the Hawaiian women.

"They have the sweetest voices of any women I've ever met," I concluded.

"My aunt, the Queen, has a very sweet voice. Was it warm, tell me, when you were there?" If there is one topic upon which I can grow eloquent it is the warm, wet heat of Honolulu.

"O, I dread the heat—a little," she said; "it wilts me. But I shall swim—I love to swim, and I'll live in the water. You know, we have a pretty place down Waikiki way—did you see it? No? Well, it is very pretty—just in the gap, you know, where the winds can sweep down from the mountains back and near the ocean. And then, you know, with us"—she said "us" very pretty and naturally—"July, August and September are the hot months. It will be cooler now."

"We can't talk politics, you know Princess. Tell me something about yourself, your life."

"Well, it has been a strange life, really, and a very romantic one. Still I have been happy. I have seen a great deal and everybody has been most kind to me."

"That isn't surprising," I remarked in all sincerity.

She smiled back at this, showing her even, pretty teeth between curling red lips. Oh, she's very charming, this heiress apparent to a throne that is not. Her dark hair curls softly about her forehead, her eyebrows are so delicately traced, her brown eyes behind the eyeglasses are large and so expressive. Her nose is as straight and her skin is as white as Maxine Elliott's, but more warmly tinted.

Who wouldn't be a Jacobin in such a cause? His Suavity, Papa Cleghorn, is diplomatically sincere, doubtless, in saying that the visit of himself and his daughter to the islands has no political significance. But the Princess' youth, her beauty, her grace and her charming savoir faire are weapons that no Royalist could resist using. If Bonnie Prince Charlie were half so gracious and loveable, the old-time enthusiasm for the King over the water is quite comprehensible.

"Do you know whom I met on the steamer crossing the Atlantic? Anthony Hope. He sat beside me and we talked. I was surprised and delighted to find him so unspoiled, so modest, you know. He is a delightful talker. We talked of books and authors, and he hadn't a word of dispraise for anybody—Oh, yes, he did, too. For just one."

"And that one?" I asked.

"Marie Correlli. Why, he told me that Miss Correlli insists that she is but 18. Extraordinary, isn't it?" Kaiulani's o's and her a's are just a bit broader than an American's. But I don't know that that's more English in her than Hawaiian. "Imagine a girl of 18 with experience enough to write such books as Correlli's. Mr. Hope admires the French writers. So do I. I think the French write better than anybody else. But you know I was brought up by an old Englishwoman, and she wouldn't have me read any French book but books of travels and histories. I prefer the German to the French. Yes, the language—and the people, too. It was so easy for me to learn German. Of course I don't speak it perfectly by any means. But if I have a talent it is for learning languages. French was easy, too. Of course I have had French maids,

THE ANNEXATION CRAWFISH.

The special organ of the Annexation Club has daily told us that annexation was an accomplished fact and that seventy millions of free, etc., etc., Americans would receive Hawaii nei into their open arms with a welcome that would be heard over the whole world in December next.

Mr. Dole's organ, the P. C. Advertiser, threw out gentle hints that the annexationists might yet be disappointed and that they might find that their crowing was premature. In consequence of such utterances the Advertiser was accused, tried, and condemned of political heresy by the annexation organ, and its policy was stamped as pessimistic and unworthy of the "hip-hip-hurrah" crowd that make, Dole's hirsute ornaments grey. To the great amusement of those who have watched the "fur fly," the annexation organ has quite suddenly adopted the pessimistic views of the Advertiser, and it is with a broad grin that we publish the following extracts from the last Star editorial:

The opponents of annexation have been working hard against the cause, and have at last got the labor organizations to join their ranks.

That annexation would be a walk-over was never considered. Work of the most trying and constant kind has been and will have to be done.

Those who are fighting the cause of annexation are well armed with facts and figures, and it is facts and figures and not sentiment that will tell.

It would be a terrible blow to the chances of a second term, which, considering the prosperity of the country is very probable, to have an administration measure like this defeated in the early part of the administration.

No news is good news. The annexation camp is evidently in possession of much news by the last steamer, to judge from the tone of its mouthpiece.

WILL NOT FIGHT.

There will be no sham battle fought by our gallant soldiers, and the public, that had hoped to see the plains above Punahou covered with clammy, horrid sham corpses will be disappointed, as will the generalissimo of the army who suggested the manuevres of his army a la Aldershot.

The boys don't care for sham battles, and if Mr. Dole is very anxious to see one he will have to get up another "revolution" and take his chances on seeing another storming of Makapuu Fort, a valiant deed not exceeded in bravery even by the heroes of Balaklava and Plevna, according to the "bulletins" of the late war.

When Dole's thirst for battles became known and the officers and men of the army were apprised of the presidential wish of witnessing a sham battle, a meeting was held of the officers. Their colonel told them that he had his own opinion of sham battles (and a still more decided one in regard to real ones) but that he hated to express his opinion without first having heard the sentiments of his gallant officers, all of whom he supposed to be scarred veterans of the (sham) battle field.

The majority of the officers admitted, however, that they had not taken any active part in battles of the sham or genuine nature, and that they did not feel like looking for any new experience just now. The other officers had all witnessed sham battles, some of them having taken an active part in the great manuevres of the Colorado troops whose manuevring in a cloud of dust could not be seen, and of the California army which got winded and disgusted after storming a few strongholds. A suggestion that hacks be engaged to take the men to and from the battle field was severely rebuked by the presiding officer who evidently thought that an army in a "sham battle" is bad enough but is, going forth to battle in hacks, still more ridiculous.

And now Dole, we and company, who would had enjoyed the circus are shedding tears. The sham battle proposition has been shelved by an unanimous vote and the record of the Makapuu Fort storming, fortified with empty sardine tins will not be broken this year except the Japs should laud to give a color of truth to Thurston's last trump card—the Japanese scare.

HAWAIIAN BOYS ABROAD.

It is often stated that the climate of Hawaii is very enervating and that the dolce far niente propensities of the islanders are due to the constant summer weather of the country.

The young island boys who have been sent abroad to be educated at colleges and universities, have everywhere proven that they are not "enervated" one little bit, and that in the fields of sports they are the equals and often the superiors of their classmates from the "hardy" North.

The boys have been noticed and praised in the reports of the sporting circles of Yale, Harvard, Ann Arbor, Berkeley, Stanford, King College in England and other great educational institutions.

The latest record received tells us about a great football game between the Stanfords and Berkeleys in which young Henry Beckley, the son of our distinguished steamship owner, Mr. George Beckley, covered himself with glory and even roused the enthusiasm of the blase sporting editors of San Francisco's great journals.

Henry Beckley played with the Stanfords who won 16 to 8. It was no child's play and the Examiner says that "a dozen or more of the youngsters were bruised and battered up, until some of them looked as if they had been in a prize-fight." The same journal further says that "anyone who can play football like this Hawaiian (Henry Beckley), ought to be kept in the United States even if this country has to take Hawaii to get him." A higher compliment could hardly be paid to a freshman and when Henry returns to Hawaii on his vacation the boys here will get up a game for his special benefit and show that they are all athletes in spite of the "enervating" climate.

Grand free concert at Pauahi Hall, Oahu College to-morrow evening. An unusually good program has been prepared.

Senator Pettigrew has been busily engaged all day in interviewing responsible persons and gathering information in regard to Hawaiian affairs. He is located at the Snow Cottage.

The sports have been after the plovers during the past few days and hundreds of the fine birds are now awaiting their ultimate fate in the ice house. The "sportsman" who, a short while ago, remonstrated in the press against the "other" fellow shooting plovers during this month, got the biggest bag—simply to see whether they are fit to eat.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

Senator Pettigrew is here and is being driven around and entertained by the standing committee for the pulling of senatorial legs, of the Annexation Club. The Government clerks are now looking for another "assessment." If more Senators come the boys will be "brokers."

We have received a communication from a resident of the Hamakua district, in which it is stated that the new road through the coffee district mauka of Paauilo has been accepted by the Government from the contractors, although in a highly unsatisfactory condition. A petition signed by a number of the taxpayers in the district has been forwarded to the Government asking that the road in its present condition be not accepted. Upon investigation we find that the road referred to has not yet been delivered by the contractor and consequently not yet accepted by the Government. Under the circumstances we see no reason to publish the correspondence sent to us as the writer evidently has been erroneously informed. When the road is ready, delivered to and accepted by the superintendent of public works we shall with pleasure give space to any fair criticism in regard to the work.

Elucidated.—"Whut do it mean," said Miss Miami Jones, "when dey talks in dis here novel book 'bout er young man payin' his addresses to a young lady?" "Doesn't you know?" exclaimed Erastus Pinkley. "I sho'ly doesn'." "It means dat he done put de postage stamp on de love letter."

O HAD I BUT

Aladdin's Lamp, if only for a day, I'd fill my house with fairy lamps and make the pixies pay. Not having that especial lamp in view, the next best thing to do is to bring light out of darkness by purchasing from our stock which is unexcelled for beauty of design and variety.

We have just received a new invoice of varieties in this line and the prices, as usual, are very moderate and agreeable to all tastes and purses. You can inspect handsome hanging lamps in brass, bronze, silver, nickel, porcelain and that exquisite black with Rochester burners; Piano lamps in brass, silver and nickel plated; Banquet and Boudoir lamps of the simplest or most recherche descriptions; Bracket and Hall lamps; Chandeliers with two, three or four burners and in most graceful shapes; Nickel plated and silver lamps of various styles; the great mammoth light that will eclipse the moon if you are near enough to it; pretty little hand chamber lamps convenient at all times and large street lamps, very useful for our suburbs. We have them all to perfection and cordially invite you to inspect them.

 A letter from Dr. Jordan of Hong Kong reported a fairly satisfactory state of affairs in the matter of health in that city. An epidemic of German measles was about the only prevalent disease.

The Frawley Co.'s Regular Sale.
 The sale for single performances for the Frawley engagement will commence Monday morning, November 15th, to-morrow being the last day devoted to the sale of season tickets. The company will arrive here on Thursday morning, on the Alameda, and will open that night in Madeline Lucette Ripley's famous comedy, "Christopher Junior," a synopsis of which will be given later on.
 The season will undoubtedly be a successful one as the sale of season tickets, if taken as an indication, certainly shows that the company is again wanted. Mr. Crowe, the stage mechanist, and his assistants have been working ever since the arrival of the Australia, putting things in shape for the opening night. The Arabian Nights will follow as the bill for the matinee Saturday the 20th, and the famous war play "Shenandoah," for the night.
Held for Investigation
 Sam Stone, a well-known Hawaiian, who recently was a guard at Oahu Jail, was arrested yesterday and is held for investigation.
 It has lately come to the knowledge of the authorities that Stone was acting very peculiarly, and from the reports the conclusion was drawn that he was either practising kahunaism in a somewhat glaring manner, or that he is demented. Deputy-Marshal Hitchcock, the expert on kahunas, was busy this morning examining a number of witnesses in regard to the matter, and Stone is in the meantime confined at the Station House.

The Mariposa Arrives.

The O. S. S. Mariposa, Haywood commander, arrived in port and hauled alongside the Pacific Mail wharf at about 11:30 o'clock last night. From Apia had strong winds and very rough weather. She brought the following passengers: Henry Bull, Jr., S. Percy Smith, W. Churchill and wife, Henry D. Page.

and that helped. The Russians are the wonderful people, though. The Russian women are fascinating. If I were not myself, I should choose to be a Russian woman. They are charming.

"The Hawaiians are so musical. Aren't you?"

"I love music. I play—yes. And I used to sing. But I have been ill—quite ill. Even father didn't know how ill I was."

"You look perfectly well," I said. She does. Though she is so slight there is that springy sort of spirited strength about Kaiulani that makes one think of a steel watch-spring or the tirelessness of a deer.

"Did you see the Queen, Liliuokalani, before you came out?"

"Yes. I called to pay my respects on my way out here."

There can be nothing in the talk of rupture between aunt and niece. Liliuokalani has not—never has had a more loyal subject than her proud, beautiful niece. While we were talking a friend of the Princess, a Hawaiian girl, came in, and we three got to discussing the political situation in the islands, despite previous paternal admonitions. It was pretty, then, to see the earnestness with which Kaiulani said:

"Even the enemies of my aunt, of the Queen, will tell you that all through her suffering, and through her hard treatment, she conducted herself with the utmost dignity. And she felt the indignities, she felt the insults—I know it, for I felt them for her."

Between the Princess' delicate brows there appeared two tiny wrinkles. Her spirited face lost its color and she closed her lips tightly. Looking at her then I thought to myself. If Kaiulani had been the aunt instead of the niece there would have been no Republic of Hawaii to ask for annexation.

Everything I had heard or seen at the islands was of interest to Kaiulani. She smiled brightly when the story I could tell pleased her, and once, when the narrative wasn't so pleasing, her long fingers, about which she coiled the slender gold thread of her lorgnette-holder as she talked, closed quickly, tightly.

"All that makes me very sad, but—"

And again the instructions of A. S. Cleghorn were violated.

But self-possessed Princess Kaiulani is too clever to be indiscreet. She is no puppet. Of course she is young and very girlish, but she is more than a beautiful pretender to an abdicated throne.

She has been made a woman of the world early by the life she has led. She is, or rather she will be, a woman of strong character. She has been well fitted to play a leading role, and the knowledge of her ability and of her accomplishments makes one wish that there might be in store a future worthy of her.

"People do not know Hawaii," said the Princess latter. "They do not realize how beautiful the islands are. You would be surprised at the ignorance of people I have met about them. Why, they would hardly believe me when I said that we had electric lights there."

"Hawaii ought to be the Monte Carlo of the Pacific."

"Not that," she answered. "But it would make a delightful pleasure place—a winter resort. But really, they know nothing about Hawaii."

"The thing that makes me angriest"—it was the friend of the Princess who spoke—the thing I can't stand, is when people ask such stupid questions about Hawaii. Do you know a woman here in San Francisco said to me:

"Do they—do your wear clothes there?"

"And I said, 'No; we go stark naked. I was naked—hadn't a stitch on—when I got on the boat, and never wore clothes till I arrived in San Francisco.'"

"Dreadful!" she exclaimed.

We all laughed, as much at the Hawaiian girls' wrath as at the San Francisco woman's ignorance and stupidity.

"A woman asked me that once," said Kaiulani, slipping down into her chair more comfortably and coming out after her laugh from behind one of the fans the native Hawaiian women make, with "Aloha" woven into it.

"And did you answer her in the same way?"

"I asked her what kind of person she thought I was!"

The tone was curt and decidedly haughty. I thought of what the Princess had told me of Kalakaua's kingly dignity, and decided that his niece had inherited more than one of the dead king's good qualities.

"But listen!" said the vivacious young friend of the Princess. "I had a belt-buckle made of a boar's tooth—an immense affair, curled and hideous. That same woman asked me what it was, and I told her it was my grandfather's tooth."

"You did!" laughed Kaiulani, pressing her shapely long hands together.

"Yes, I reminded her of what she had read of cannibals' long teeth, and told her that whenever my grandfather found that this tusk of his needed sharpening he killed a white man or woman and cooked and ate 'm."

"But fancy—fancy! She sat next to my father one night at dinner, and, pointing to my belt, said something about what a strange thing it was for me to wear my grandfather's tooth as a buckle. Can you imagine my father's face?"

It was delicious to listen to this young woman's indignant scorn of American credulity and bad manners.

"Shall you be seasick?" I asked Kaiulani.

"Yes, I am pretty sure to be. I was coming across this last time. But I'm anxious to get home, to be home," she said with a sigh. "Of course, I've taken a house here and there,—the 'I' sounded odd from the young girl—but it wasn't like being in one's own place. I'm tired now. I've been living in my boxes for years past. I enjoy traveling very, very much. But I want to get unpacked now. I want to settle down and rest."

"I hope you'll come to the islands again," she said very graciously, giving me a slender hand in a rather high hand-shake. "I hope you'll come while I am there."

"I envy you your trip and the prospect of seeing the beautiful place again."

"I don't know that I am a person to be envied," answered the Princess of Hawaii, smiling a little sadly.
