cian and HIV-infected patients, served 17.9% (1,383) Native Hawaiian patients in 1995. This is also a Ke Ola O Hawaii site. Halawa Correctional Facility is the largest state prison in Hawaii, detaining over 1100 sentenced male convicled felons of which 40.9% are Native Hawaiian (Blaisdell, 1996).

Ke Ola O Hawaii Community Medicine Sites
The Waianae Coast Comprehensive Health Center serves patients from the neighborhood community. In 1995, the Center served 8,245 Native Hawaiian patients; 49% of total patients served. Kooka Kalihi Valley Clinic serves medically indigent patients, working poor people and QUEST patients from its neighborhood community. Thirteen percent of the facility’s regular users are Native Hawaiian and 94% of first time visitors are of Asian/Pacific Islander descent.

The Interdisciplinary Training for Health Care in Rural Areas is a community based, collaborative model focusing on interdisciplinary education for health care students. This program provides training for thirty-six students from six disciplines, one of which is medicine. Sites include: Kealakekua, Honokaa and Pahoa on the Big Island; Hana on Maui; Waimea on Kauai; and Kaunakakai on Molokai.

Fourth Year Native Hawaiian Health Elective
Initiated by Dr. Kekuni Blaisdell, a Native Hawaiian senior faculty member, this Native Hawaiian Health elective places fourth year students in areas with high concentrations of Native Hawaiians. These sites are located on the islands of Hawaii, Maui and Kauai.

Native Hawaiian Traditions are Incorporated into JABSOM Annual Events
During the first semester, an Open House is held for family, friends and faculty. The Open House is a conscious effort on the part of the JABSOM administration and faculty to develop the concept of ohana (discussed earlier) into the medical school’s larger family. The annual Winter Memorial Ceremony offers an opportunity for medical students and faculty to give thanks to those who have donated their bodies for Anatomy Laboratory use. Following an ecumenical service, the students take the donors’ ashes out to sea in outrigger canoes for burial. Each academic year ends with a luau that the busy first year class presents to the graduating fourth year class. This occasion, held on a country estate on a weekend afternoon, features Native Hawaiian luau food and hula. First year students of diverse ethnicities dance hula to entertain their fourth year guests. The fourth year students reciprocate by thanking their hosts with hula. In addition to the University of Hawaii Commencement Ceremony, JABSOM holds a Convocation each Spring in the Kennedy Theater of the East-West Center. Graduating students have the opportunity to publicly thank the person(s) who have helped and supported them most with a fragrant maile leaf lei, given only on very special occasions. This is a touching, often tearful, ceremony of thanksgiving.

Conclusion
A function of the faculty in the Native Hawaiian Center of Excellence is to monitor the JABSOM curriculum to assure that Native Hawaiian patients and health problems continue to be well represented. At this juncture, whether it be found in health care problems, in service in the community or in annual events, Native Hawaiian culture is well integrated into the curriculum of the John A. Burns School of Medicine.

Poem

To my Spouse on Election Day
by Dr Robert S. Flowers

Today is the 5th of November
When millions go to the polls
In trust that the precinct poll tender
Will find us on the "registered" rolls.

For months the campaigning has bored us
With fake smiles, and rhetoric and lies
From candidates who cajoled and impulsed us,
And wooed us with dark shifty eyes.

Some are more honest than others,
But each is a political beast -
Distinguishing themselves from their brothers
By ethics convoluted and creased.

Some are forthright with good morals
And surely could be a bright star,
Deserving support and our laurel -
But it's difficult to know who they are.

Who should be leading our nation?
And which one should grace Congress's halls?
Who should we choose this occasion -
A man or a lady with balls?

And who should we let be our mayor?
Or prosecute the criminals and such?
And who should be the school system's tailor?
And should officials do little or much?

Do we want them speedily making
New laws to rest on our head?
Are they best when they're working or faking?
"The least governed are the best,"
it's been said.

As I carefully ponder my ballot,
And consider for whom I should vote,
I think of King Arthur and Camelot
And a castle surrounded by moat.

A monarch would be a relief
If intelligent, honest and kind;
But the evil ones cause so much grief
That to choose one you'd have to be blind.

But I usually end up selecting
Some people I really don't want
From that ballot that is long and perplexing -
A slate I'd be embarrassed to flaunt.

So who should I vote for today
And empower to alter my life
To tax me so I pay and I pay
And disappoint me and fill me with strife.

There is an alternative choice -
Who at politics is just a beginner,
A candidate who makes me rejoice
And am always dead sure is a winner.

That candidate is more than a friend
It's someone I admire and I respect
We communicate even though
I don't send
Any letters to reprove and correct.

So my ballot got punched with a flair
And I left feeling quite satisfied
Although I had a strange stare,
I had candidates proven and tried!

Today's the 5th of November
And my candidate hasn't a clue.
I smile as I shyly remember
That I cast all my votes just for you!
