AN OPEN LETTER.

HONOLULU, Jan. 27, 1892.

C. W. ASHFORD, Esq., Honolulu—
Sir: Your invitation to be present this evening at Emma Square and speak, I cannot accept. Your unwarranted and cowardly attempt to capture the meeting on Saturday evening, January 23d, which was called by the Native Sons of Hawaii for the purpose of hearing me, is sufficient to make any gentleman have a desire to keep away from you.
I had asked the Native Sons to allow you to speak after I had finished, which was all you asked for. But when you came in to pack the meeting, grabbed a chair, mounted it without permission of the president of the meeting and commenced to speak, the righteous indignation of 600 to 700 people gave an expression of their opinion of you by booting you out of the house. Then, true to the spirit that rules you, you went outside and stated in language more forceful than elegant that Dillingham would not allow you to speak.

After my card appeared in the paper inviting you to be present at the meeting on Saturday evening and you had replied stating that you wished to speak, a number of people suggested that the meeting was not called for joint debate and therefore Mr. Ashford ought not to expect to speak. To everyone I said most emphatically that I would not oppose his request, that as I would not allow C. W. Ashford nor any other man to choke me off from speaking at a proper time and place, so I would fight for his right in that respect if necessary.

As you do not appear to possess a particle of honor or honesty, and appear to judge everyone else by your own standard, I wish to have nothing whatever to do with you or any of your meetings.

B. F. DILLINGHAM.

CARBOLINEUM AVENARIUS.

A preservative against rotting,
decay, fungus, etc., of wood and stone.
Will preserve any kind of wood above or under ground or water and prolong its life at least 100 percent.

Will keep off all sorts of insects,
vermin or other enemies of wood.
Will prevent rats and mice gnawing
wood coated with it.

Will force all moisture out of wood without closing the pores.

Will prevent shingles, coated with it, from rotting, cracking or warping.

Will prevent rope treated with it from rotting, causing it to remain pliable and excellent for coating.

Tendes will not attack timber coated with it.

Carbolineum avenarius does not contain acids or poisonous ingredients injurious to the fibres of wood.

The following is an extract from the London "Building World": "The directors of the Palatine Railways say of Carbolineum Avenarius: "Two boards cut from one and the same piece of pine, one of which for the sake of experiment was painted with Carbolineum Avenarius, and the other left unpainted, were buried, and after a lapse of three years dug up and examined. The result was, that the wood to which the Carbolineum Avenarius had been applied showed no signs of decay, whilst the other was found to be in a rotting condition."

As a wood preservative it has no equal.

Daily Bulletin

Pledged to neither Sect nor Party, But established for the benefit of all.

THURSDAY, JAN. 28, 1892.

Mr. Waterhouse sticks. February 3d he'll be stuck. Only hope he'll not stick the country.

The dismal frontier lawyer vituperation of Mr. Ashford fell significantly flat at Emma Square. It extorted only a few segregated guffaws. The Hawaiians probably remember that this shout for equality shouted June 30, 1887, his intolerance of the natives' having any control over Anglo-Saxons. And he thumped the butt of his rifle on the platform to emphasize his noble rage!

If it prove true that Mr. Emmeluth has decided to retire, he will deserve the most esteemed consideration and warmest gratitude of right-thinking citizens. Mr. Emmeluth has gone far enough in his move to show that he has the courage of his convictions. Although the stand he is abandoning was assailable, not a word could be breathed against his principles, nor any detraction made of his intelligent capacities.

STILL CHANGING.

The Advertiser this morning confesses that its attempt to get up an independent ticket for Nobles has been a dead failure. By the context of the Advertiser's article, which there is not space enough to discuss in detail, it appears that the object of that paper was to compel a compromise between the dissident conservative people and those who put forth the National Reform ticket. This object was, however, exhibited in a strange way. It was not revealed in the course pursued by the Advertiser. That paper made an uncompromising attack on the ticket as a whole, then came down a peg and kindly endorsed part of the ticket, next made a mixed ticket of three N. R. nominees and two nominees of no party or organization, although members of the old Reform party. For one day it upheld this composite ticket, strenuously contending that the interjected names would not damage the interests opposed to the National Liberals. Today the Advertiser takes new ground scarcely less inexplicable. It says, "Hotheads may have expected victory in spite of division, but we have dreamed no such dream," adding remarks to the effect that what it sought was combination, and that it does not approve of the independent candidates remaining in the field. Further on appears another variation in the editorial mind, when the Advertiser promises to still support—not the two independent candidates but either one of them should the other retire. How that paper can see a different principle governing the case of one from that potent in the case of two is something no fellow can understand. There is a partial explanation of this fresh position in the deadset the Advertiser makes against Mr. Neumann. Surely that paper does not run away with the idea that everybody not quite satisfied with the National Reform ticket agrees with it in its antipathy to Mr. Neumann. What assurance has it that most of the voters who will scratch for Mr. Waterhouse or Mr. Emmeluth will not scratch some other candidate than Mr. Neumann? And in a close contest every name scratched one or two times, or even once, might mean one Liberal elected. Start two or three hundred scratching, and the scratched votes may easily elect the whole National Liberal ticket. The Advertiser knows that Mr. Neumann is one of the strongest candidates in favor of improved commercial relations with the United States, and one of the ablest opponents of constitutional disturbance. Why, then, does not the Advertiser abandon its factional policy totogether and go in for an undivided opposition to the party of anarchy and adventurers?

P. C. A. AND INDEPENDENTS.

EDITOR BULLETIN:—To those voters who are desirous of giving their vote for the best interests of the country at large, yet who are a little puzzled as to how safe it will be to scratch the Mechanics' National Reform Hui Kalaisina ticket, the Advertiser's editorial of to-day is a disgusting evidence that that paper's editor is less sure of what is best than the ordinary qualified voter for Nobles.

From conversations generally heard, the Advertiser's editorials are doing more to hurt the Mechanics' party and give votes to the Bush-Wilcox party than will the independent candidates on election day. The change in the P. C. A.'s tone (with reference to whom we shall vote for) from day-to-day is sickening.

A few days since the Advertiser came out with what it called the "Advertiser Ticket" for Nobles, bearing the names of Messrs. Waterhouse and Emmeluth, and this morning we are told that we must not vote for these two estimable gentlemen, as there is no show for electing them.

If it is clear to the Advertiser today that these gentlemen cannot be elected, why did they advocate them only three days ago? If they were strong enough to "get there" on Monday I contend that they are strong enough to get there to-day and next Wednesday. The plea that votes given for independents as against the straight Mechanics' ticket will elect the Liberal ticket, is not fully warranted, the friends of the independent candidates contending that they will poll a large indifferent vote that with the Mechanics' and Liberal tickets only in the field, would go to the latter.

The P. C. A.'s "poker" allusion to Mr. Neumann is a very lame objection and reads as though that paper had a valid objection to the gentleman but is afraid to say what it is.

On the whole, if the Advertiser will refrain from further editorials upon political matters and candidates until after election day, I am sure that there will be no complaint from their numerous subscribers of fifty cents per month, while voters will have an opportunity to make up their minds whom they will vote for, and after the election is over the P. C. A. will certainly be entitled to a vote of thanks from the National Reform-Mechanics' Union-Huikalaiana Party, no matter who is elected.

Respectfully submitted, ALFRED S. HARTWELL, Atty for Petitioner. Jan. 27, 1892.

CHINESE CAN'T VOTE!

So Decides the Supreme Court.

Full Text of the Decision With the Petitioner's Brief.

Supreme Court of the Hawaiian Islands, January Term, 1892. In Banco. Judd, C. J., Bickerton and Dole, JJ. McCully, J. absent.

In the matter of the application of L. Ablo for a writ of mandamus.

The constitution substitutes the race status of Hawaiian, American or European birth or descent as a condition for the voting privilege which was a requirement of citizenship which was a requirement under the previous constitution.

A native of China who was naturalized here and acquired the right to vote under the previous constitution was deprived of that right by the promulgation of the present constitution.

The petitioner prays for a writ of mandamus to be addressed to Henry Smith, Samuel F. Graham and George N. Shaw, Inspectors of Elections of the 2nd Precinct of the 4th District of Honolulu, where the petitioner resides, directing them to cause his name to be entered on the list of voters for Representatives, which they had refused to do on the sole ground that he was of Chinese descent.

An alternative writ was issued returnable January 27th, at which time the respondents made answer.

Mr. A. S. Hartwell for the petitioner; Attorney-General Whiting for the respondents.

BRIEF OF PETITIONER'S COUNSEL.

The sole question is whether the petitioner's Chinese birth and descent preclude him from voting.

1. The Constitution of 1887 does not pretend to state all the rights and privileges of Hawaiian subjects, but on the contrary in its 79th Article expressly declares that all laws then in full effect, until altered or repealed by the Legislature; such parts only excepted as are repugnant to this Constitution. All laws heretofore enacted, or that may hereafter be enacted, which are contrary to this Constitution, shall be null and void.

This means that all the civil, political and legal rights of Hawaiian subjects are neither based on, nor do they originate with the Constitution of 1887. That Constitution leaves in full force all the statutory provisions including the provisions secured by the Constitution of 1864 which are not "repugnant" or "contrary" to its provisions.

In the Constitution of 1887 the Sovereign renounced the absolute veto power, and the power of appointing Nobles and dismissing Cabinets, and limited the exercise of his public acts to those which his Cabinet should advise and consent to. But no private rights of Hawaiian subjects were destroyed. By the law always in force since this country had a Constitutional Government, no man's right can be taken from him except by "due process of law."

I submit that as the petitioner had the right to vote under the Constitution of 1864, that right cannot be taken from him by any subsequent statute or Constitution, and that it has not been taken from him. His rights were clearly fixed by law. "Every foreigner so naturalized shall be entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities of an Hawaiian subject."--Section 433, Comp. Laws.

This Act was amended in the Acts of 1887 and 1890, but not a word of the above quoted sentence is changed.

The Constitution of 1887, in requiring voters to be "of Hawaiian, American, or European birth or descent," does not refer to those who then had a Constitutional, statutory, and vested right to vote.

It is one thing to enlarge vested private rights, one thing to direct the manner in which they shall be exercised; it is another and different thing to deprive one altogether of such rights. That, I submit, ought not to be inferred or implied by the language used in the Constitution of 1887.

2. This Court held in Kekaula's case, that as a conviction in 1882 for felonious cattle branding did not under the laws then in force disqualify one from voting, the disqualification imposed by Article 73 of the Constitution of 1887, of one "who shall have been convicted of Felonious Cattle Branding," did not disqualify Kekaula.

The language of the Court in that case was explicit, in its recognition of a right to vote existing under the Constitution of 1864, viz: "(1)--The specified prescription in Article 73 of the Constitution of 1887, making a conviction for the felonious branding a disqualification from civil rights cannot be applied to instances of this offence committed previously to the date of this Constitution, for it would be ex post facto legislation.

(2)--If Kekaula now lies under disqualifications, it must be pursuant to the provisions of Article 73 of the Constitution of 1864."

There is nothing legally "repugnant" or "contrary" to the petitioner's right, in the requirement of the Constitution of 1887 as to voters. With questions of policy this Court has nothing to do.

It is not a question whether more Chinese shall be naturalized or not, but whether those who were naturalized voters until 1887 are not now voters.

Respectfully submitted, ALFRED S. HARTWELL, Atty for Petitioner. Jan. 27, 1892.

OPINION OF THE COURT BY DOLE, J.

The petitioner claims the right to vote on the ground that he had such right previous to the present constitution, and that there is nothing in this constitution which destroys that right. The constitutional provision for the voting privilege limits it to residents of Hawaiian, American or European birth or descent. (Articles 59, 62). This is a radical change from the provision for voting in the constitution of 1864, which limits the privilege to subjects. (Article 62) and which was annulled by the promulgation of the present constitution which substituted the race requirement for the old condition of citizenship. (Preamble of the Constitution). But Section 432 of the Civil Code provides that every naturalized foreigner shall be entitled to the rights, privileges and immunities of a Hawaiian subject. This antedates the present constitution. But what are the rights of the Hawaiian subject as to voting? Are they not so merged into the new provisions that now he votes,--not as a Hawaiian subject at all, but solely as a resident Hawaiian, American or European by birth or descent? If this may be answered in the affirmative, as we think it may, the 432 section of the Civil Code stands untouched by the constitution, and the petitioner, by virtue of his naturalization, is entitled to the rights, privileges and immunities of a Hawaiian subject, but voting is not one of them, unless the additional race condition exists.

A constitution which abrogates the previous fundamental law, necessarily repeals all existing statutes inconsistent with itself. It may even be said that it repeals all statute law existing at the time of its promulgation; whence the necessity of re-enacting all such laws as are not repugnant to it. (Const. Art. 79). When such a constitution takes effect, it is a new departure in the government of the country, inasmuch as it states anew the principles upon which the government is to be administered, and rearranges the distributions and limitations of sovereign powers. What is not changed is reaffirmed. The new statement of the fundamental law takes the place of the old.

Under this change of voting condition, from citizenship to race status, the plaintiff has lost his privilege, whether intentionally or not it does not concern this issue, though upon general principles, it is to be regretted. The voting right is a privilege rather than a right, and a duty rather than a privilege. Even if it is regarded as a right, the loss of it through the promulgation of a new constitution is by "due process of law" of the most pronounced character.

The plaintiff's counsel refers in his brief to the opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Court in reply to questions addressed them by the Cabinet in regard to the voting qualifications of one Kekaula, who had been convicted of felonious branding of cattle in 1882, in support of his position in this case.

It seems to us that that opinion is based upon different principles than are raised in this case. The circumstances were also different.

Kekaula had been convicted of an offense under the old constitution which did not deprive him of his civil rights, as it would have done under the present constitution, which found him in the enjoyment of these rights. The Justices consider that the provision of article 73 of the Constitution, which deprived one who "shall have been convicted of" felonious branding of cattle, of his civil rights, did not apply to Kekaula for two reasons, i. e. because the language "shall have been convicted" denotes future convictions, and because the deprivation of civil rights by the present constitutional enactment, for a previous offence committed under laws which did not deprive the offender of civil rights, would distinctly characterize it as ex post facto legislation, and a construction involving such a result should not be adopted even of a constitutional provision unless the words distinctly require it as they do not in that case.

We do not therefore see that that case is a precedent or a guide in any way to this.

We find that the petitioner is not entitled to vote, his previous right having been annulled by the Constitution, and therefore dismiss the complaint. January 28, 1892.

"MIZPAH"

Has become a word dear to the hearts of mothers. The "Mizpah" Valve Nipple is made of pure gum, will not collapse and prevents much colic because they admit air into the bottle as the milk is drawn out, thus preventing a vacuum being formed. Give the baby a chance to express his opinion. You'll very soon find out whether the "Mizpah" is a success or not.

We have an assortment of Davidson and Gooden Nipples, also Rubber Bubbles and Teething Rings, and Nursery requisites in general.

Every household should have a Hot Water Bag. We have some new ones and if used with ordinary care will last for years. Invalid Cushions can be used as "life preservers" on land as well as sea. Ours are for home service, and are the best in every way.

NATIONAL LIBERALS.

Spout Soft Sawder to the Dear People.

Large Mass Meeting in Emma Square
—C. W. Ashford, M. or C.

Before half-past seven last night from 500 to 600 people were gathered in Emma Square to the National Liberals' mass meeting. The crowd increased as the oratory proceeded.

Mr. C. W. Ashford began speaking sharp on time. He stated that he had sent an invitation to Mr. Dillingham and Mr. Thurston to be present and explain that $500 stock deal, assuring them that they would have a respectful hearing. He then in a loud voice called out, "Where are you, Mr. Dillingham?" This call addressed to Mr. Thurston was repeated in the same voice, eliciting applause and laughter. He had not seen that evening's BULLETIN but had been told it had an item stating that Mr. Thurston had been persuaded by his friends to keep away for fear of raising a row, also that Mr. Dillingham gave his reasons for staying away in an open letter received too late for that issue. He would introduce the young candidate for Representative in the Fifth Ward.

Mr. Pua opened by saying they were before them as the Liberal party, and asking them to vote straight. John A. Cummins when a Minister wanted to grant the United States power to land troops, and to annex the country. The Queen had dismissed that man from her Cabinet. John A. Cummins was before them again, professing love for the Hawaiians, but it was all love of the lips, and he should not be trusted. The enemies of Hawaiians were to be found among themselves, Cummins and others associated with him. He begged the people to give their support to C. W. Ashford in that ward, and to himself in the fifth ward.

Mr. Ashford said in this campaign of inconsistencies, when the Sons of Hawaii put up a Massachusetts lawyer, and the Mechanics' Union put up a German lawyer, it was refreshing to find the National Liberals putting up a genuine mechanic. He introduced

Mr. E. B. Thomas, candidate for Nobles who was glad to speak for himself, having been represented on that square before by Mr. Bush. Before accepting their nomination he had examined their platform, finding it the only one to hold water. The platform of the Mechanics' Union was the greatest rubbish. Anybody elected on it could do as he liked, and that's what they wanted. The platform of the Liberal party was such as the sons of the soil, and American and European mechanics wanted. There was an item in the policy of the planters to dissolve the rice plantations and turn them into swamps. Was that what they wanted? ("No" and "sole.") People told him every day that they wondered how he got so low as to run with Bush and Wilcox. Men like Widemann and Wilcox weren't too low to run with Bush and Wilcox two years ago. Were Bush and Wilcox any worse now? Paul Neumann called himself something near a mechanic because he worked in the mines of California. And Peterson the giant could sling ink in a printing office, or do anybody's work from that of the devil upward, and the speaker believed it. (Laughter.) Why should a man getting only $10 a week pay a school tax, when children in the United States and England got education free? And those people paying such school tax had to have coolies imported to compete with them. There was a corporation formed some years ago called the Planters' Labor and Supply Co., to get labor for the plantations, yet they didn't pay for the labor but the Legislature paid $500,000 one year for them. When the natives began to complain about the Chinese, those people had nothing to say. But when the foreigners complained four years ago men were sent to the Legislature to stop Chinese coming. Then Paul Neumann was sent to Japan to get Japanese, and these were a worse curse than the Chinese. In every branch of industry Japanese were intruding. Every few years fresh lots of Asiatics were being introduced. Why not pass a law at once to stop them altogether? All he wanted was to see a state of things where the freeman would know his lines and the slave his own. John Ena professed love for the Hawaiians, but it was only for a few days. Go up Manoa Valley where he was building a house, and they wouldn't find any kanakas there. (A voice—"No; plenty opium.") Laughter. They wanted men in the Legislature who would consider the rights of workingmen, and not men who couldn't get down to the mudsills of society. Look at Great Britain and the United States, where they sent workingmen to their Legislatures, and the result was the passage of good laws. It was false that the Liberals opposed a treaty, but they wanted an equilateral, that is, with both sides equal, not a jagged treaty. He didn't ask any man to vote for him, unless they thought he was a fit man to elect, and he thanked them for their attention.

Mr. W. H. Cummings was introduced by Mr. Ashford as one elected by the National Reform party two years ago, who had remained poor while others became rich, but who stood by his colors. Mr. Cummings backed up his introducer's claim for him of his steadfastness. For love of his country he had neglected his business. There was a confusion of names between Mr. Cummins and himself, but the more patriotic of them was the one who stated his principles in public, not the one who concealed his ideas. The speaker touched on various topics, then entered on a fervent advocacy of a national bank, with an issue of paper currency adequate to the wants of the people. In the course of his remarks he said the missionaries taught his grandfather that he should lay up treasure in heaven, and got all his land at 25 cents an acre. Then when he was destitute they told him to ask and he should receive, but when he went begging a mite from them they told him to go to work. In conclusion he urged the women to make their men vote the National Liberal ticket.

Mr. L. W. P. Kaneali of Waiuku was introduced as another member of the last Legislature who could not be seduced from his principles, and who would now address them briefly (emphasis on the "briefly"). Mr. Kaneali said he had been waiting a long time for a chance to speak. They had been called paupers, revolutionists and traitors. The constitution was a republican one, having two sovereigns. It was in the Marshal's power to make valid their elections, a privilege too great to be in the hands of the hangman.

Mr. A. Marques was another of the faithful ones in last Legislature, and so introduced by Mr. Ashford. He did not expect to be called on, having come to hear Mr. Thurston and Mr. Ashford. In this he was greatly disappointed, as doubtless they all were. On going home he saw stuck up a handbill in blood red color, inscribed "Vote for Dillingham, the friend of the workingman." Mr. Dillingham was a man whom he esteemed, but it was a great mistake for him to go into politics. The placard mentioned reminded him of a story. It was about a cat after birds, which got caught in a fishing net. It couldn't get out and a rat poked its nose out of a hole, but being scared was going to run away until the cat called it back. The rat demurred at helping an enemy, but was assured by puss that no harm was meant. When the rat gnawed the meshes away the rat claimed cat's friendship, which the cat agreed to and proved its sincerity by eating the rat. Dillingham, like the cat with the rat, wanted the workingman to help him out of his plikiia with a big elephant on his hands. When the workingman did so Dillingham would return the favor by helping to get 30,000 coolies to eat the workingman up. These remarks, however, were forced on him "accidentally." The Liberals were charged with being revolutionists because they asked for a new constitution. They wanted a new constitution not to make a revolution, but to make peace, because a majority of the people wanted a new constitution. Those who opposed this were the enemies of the people, in that they wanted to keep the people under foot. It was a lie, also, that they were opposed to the treaty. (Reads the treaty clause of the party's platform.) Did that mean that they were against the treaty? They wanted a treaty to meet the present needs of the country, but not one for the sole benefit of a particular class. They were in favor of free trade provided it didn't injure our workingmen or our small industries, because free trade enriched nations. They didn't want a treaty with the celebrated bayonet clause, under which any corrupt Ministry might shoot people down. He was glad and surprised at this the largest meeting held in this campaign—surprised because several meetings of other parties were going on elsewhere, but he understood the people deserted them to come here. If those parties wanted audiences they must equality. He asked them to love their Queen. The Liberals were not revolutionists. He knew nothing about law. They could find him at the fishmarket. If they voted for them he would give them all honors. Mr. Maile devoted some remarks to Kaula and Kaulukou and their assumption of great legal knowledge.

Mr. Ashford announced Mr. Jas. Gay of Waialua, an independent ranchman, as candidate for Noble for two years. Being modest he made no pretensions to oratory, but if they sent him to the Legislature they would have more work and less talk.

Mr. Gay was received with applause. He said one thing he was not ashamed of, he had as much right as any man to represent them. This was his adopted country, he had been here 21 years, it was his children's country by inheritance. (Here he corrected the interpreter, causing cries of "He's talking kanaka," laughter and applause.) It had been said to him that day by several, including one kanaka so big that he couldn't lick him, that he was a traitor to the Queen. But if they elected him he could show them he wasn't a traitor. For the rest, those other gentlemen had told them what was their platform—it was one for the people, for the workingmen, for the natives especially. Now he would make a statement that would make them think he was no traitor. (Aside to the interpreter—"Give it to them just as I say.") In 1887 they forced a bitter pill on him, that was the new Constitution that deprived the natives of their rights. One more remark. He hoped they would all attend the birthday reception of the Queen, no matter how small were their hookups.

Mr. W. H. Cummings was introduced by Mr. Ashford as one elected by the National Reform party two years ago, who had remained poor while others became rich, but who stood by his colors. Mr. Cummings backed up his introducer's claim for him of his steadfastness. For love of his country he had neglected his business. He was glad and surprised at this the largest meeting held in this campaign—surprised because several meetings of other parties were going on elsewhere, but he understood the people deserted them to come here. If those parties wanted audiences they must come to this party's meetings, yet their papers would predict certain victory. This reminded him of a soldier in the Franco-Prussian war who called out he had caught a prisoner, and on his captain telling him to bring the captive in, he replied, "I can't, because he won't let me go."

Mr. Bipikane was introduced without the usual taffy. He silent, said he, that you may hear the roar of the bull. The constitution of 1887 was made in secret. Mr. Bipikane spoke for several minutes more about Mr. Bipikane, helping out the applause himself.

Mr. C. W. Ashford reminded those present at the opening that he had called Messrs. Thurston and Dillingham but neither of them had appeared. It was getting evident neither Mr. Dillingham nor Mr. Thurston cared to meet Mr. Ashford on the subject of that $500 stock deal. Referring to the Saturday night incident he said Mr. Dillingham probably smelt a rat and didn't want him (Ashford) to comply with his (D's) invitation to speak at that meeting. He told a story of a hunter who went out after a bear—Dillingham could be the hunter, while the speaker would be the bear. The hunter replied to inquiries, yes, he had seen the tracks of the bear, but didn't catch him because the tracks were getting too old—and fresh. In the present case the tracks of the bear had got too fresh for Dillingham. Allusion was again made to the item in the BULLETIN, and he assured them his invitation had been made in good faith, notwithstanding he had been treated by those men Saturday night with the malice of a missionary and the manners of a hog. There was good reason why they shouldn't want to meet him. The facts of that stock deal were of record, and "boodle" was stamped on Thurston's brow as plainly as murder on the brow of Cain. (Applause.) Thurston reminded him of the negro deacon denying stealing chickens when the rooster peeped out of his pocket and crowed. He didn't wish to dwell on this matter, on which he had already spoken publicly three times. It was just as well Thurston didn't deny the soft impeachment, for thereby he would be only adding lying to boodling. The other partner in the transaction was that eminently pious member of Fort street church, and when two men of such pious pretensions joined in a boodling enterprise—one as a bribe-giver, the other as a bribe-taker, they could raise more devil than any two deacons in Fort street church could do in any other business. He would not detract from the esteem in which Mr. Marques held Mr. Dillingham. A man who could build 15 miles of railroad without a cent of cash was no slouch. (Laughter.) Had he Mr. D's peculiar ability in building railroads he would build a railroad round every island in the group. Mr. D. said he had put in $100,000 of cash and securities, but didn't say how much of either. What he did put in the railroad was that whereby many people in the States had become rich—natural gas. Mr. Dillingham professed to be the friend of the Hawaiians. This he was shown to be in a peculiar way by his being at the head of three trusts. He had raised the charges for carrying taro from Ewa from $1 to $3 50 a ton. In the meat trust he had raised the price of meat. Several times he raised the price of milk, and although he complained he had only had one dividend in twelve years, the speaker couldn't feel sorry for him, his milk so tasted of water and every time they drank it they felt they were paying for his artesian water. Next time he went on the stand, Mr. D. should tell if that dividend wasn't a bogus one, on which he unloaded some of the stock. The speaker repeated what he said in former speeches about Mr. D's employment of Chinese on the railroad, denying that the Chinese bid for construction was the only one by several he had received. Dillingham was still employing Chinese coolies on the road. On a trip down the line the other day he saw several gangs of Portuguese at work, but every one of them that wasn't born in China was born in Japan. (Laughter.) When making a personal canvass through the Portuguese settlement the other day, he was startled to find the number of men out of employment. Therefore, he didn't believe in the friendship that employed Chinese and Japanese when white men's families were in distress for want of work. This coolie question was the most startling one before the country to-day, when the planters with thousands of coolies in the country proposed to import thousands more from India to work for 15 cents a day. Where would they, workingmen, be when these cheap coolies arrived? They would be completely swamped. Comparing the proposed action of the planters to that of vampires in sucking the life-blood out of the nation, he claimed that the Japanese had become a more serious question than the Chinese. Mr. Dillingham was allied with those planters, while the speaker was opposed to the introduction of more coolies. (Applause.) Mr. Ashford spoke on the inequalities of the present Constitution, and promised that the Liberal party if in a majority would give them a new Constitution. His remarks were on this point a repetition from former speeches, charging the missionaries with shouting against new Constitution while they favored an amendment taking the suffrage away from foreigners, so that they might be able to manipulate the natives as they had done in years past. On the other hand, the Constitution the Liberals would give them would confer on the present voters for Representatives the privilege of voting for Nobles. The poor man was equal in the sight of the law to the rich man.

If they wished to avoid being swamped by coolies vote for the Liberal party.

Mr. Thomas (from the audience)—The National ticket.

Mr. Ashford—I know what I'm talking about. The speaker closed with further appeals in behalf of the ticket, saying, as he thanked the audience, their meeting had attracted no less high personages than members of Her Majesty's Cabinet—it was easy to be seen that if anybody wanted to get among the people they must come to the Liberals' meetings.

Mr. R. W. Wilcox began speaking without interpretation at 10:25 o'clock.
