A Cure for Drunkenness. We regret that a pressure on our columns this week prevents us from publishing the letter of the Hon. S. N. Castle of this city to the Pacific Advertiser on the above subject.

The World's Commerce. As everything relating to the world's commerce is of interest, we clip the following from an eastern exchange to illustrate the immense commerce of the civilized world...

Princess Jerome Bonaparte will visit the King of Italy at Monaco. Germany has abandoned the friendship of Russia for an alliance with France and England.

The London Times says that the newly-constructed gun boat, called the 'Mussel', is now being used to revolutionize the naval architecture of the world.

The same papers say, that these new gun boats are soon to be brought into use in the pending quarrel between China and Japan.

In consequence of the coolness between Russia and Germany, the latter has contracted for new furtrains on the Russian frontier, namely, at Coonax, Grodas, Bialostok and Sozet.

China has purchased a fleet of eight gun boats, which she expects to place in the harbor of Shanghai.

From our late telegraphic advices we are led to conclude that the relations between Germany and Russia are anything but amicable.

The state of feeling in both countries is such that an open rupture between them would not surprise anyone who has been paying attention to the threatening aspect of affairs.

Under date of August 11th, we find the following telegraphic news on this subject: The London Times says: "Thinking rumors of a rupture between Germany and Austria on one hand and the connection between the latter and Russia on the other, the Emperor's life and the real estate which the Emperor bought in her own name when she was in the United States, are now being sold for $100,000."

Such complications as the above dispatches indicate, between Russia and Germany, derive much of their significance from the well known fact that Russia has never been satisfied with the treaty of Berlin, and that she is smarting under the belief that by the terms of that treaty Russia lost almost all the advantages she had gained by her war with Turkey.

HAWAIIAN GAZETTE

EDITED AND PUBLISHED BY
T. CRAWFORD MCDOWELL.
WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 24, 1879.
Well Merited.

The following tribute of respect, from Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, to the memory and worth of the late Rev. Alexander Clark, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, possesses so much truth, point and pathos, that we gladly re-print it. It was our good fortune to have known the revered gentleman in his lifetime, of whom Col. Ingersoll speaks in such eulogistic terms, and therefore, we can reach for the truth of the eulogy. Not can we for a moment refuse to accept as true, the doctrine of universal love to our species which the Rev. Mr. Clark inculcated in his life, as the only true doctrine taught by Christ when on earth, and which is everywhere spread out upon the pages of the New Testament. If then we know of any man, who taught this modern gospel, and practiced by all Christians, it would be the ushering in of an era of peace and love, which would win souls to Christ, and fill our churches with legions of sincere and honest followers, who are repelled by reason of the bigotry and intolerance which we fear is too prevalent in these days.

The clergy are not very profuse in their eulogiums on the heretical Colonel Ingersoll; and the Colonel is not given to panegyrics on the clergy. So it is a little more remarkable, in this fact, to note a heartfelt tribute given by the generous and kindly Colonel to the late Rev. Alexander Clark, who recently died in Pittsburg, Pa., beloved by all who knew him and a man well known alike to the religious and the secular world. Mr. Clark is the author of two popular works; titled "Work-day Christianity, or the Gospel in the Trade," and "The Gospel in the Trees, with Pulpit Opinions on Common Things."

Mr. Clark was by birth and education a Presbyterian of the strictest school, and by adoption and life a Methodist of the republican order. From such a Calvinistic-Unitarian Christian one might reasonably look for safe and logical opinions. In the introduction to his "Work-day Christianity," William Collier Bryant, who wrote the introduction, says: "I particularly like the catholic spirit which pervades these pages, and the sagacity with which dogmatical distinctions which they show, accounting him to be a true Christian, whatever his sect, who is a sincere follower of Jesus Christ, and faithfully obeys the law of love which he taught." The following is the beautiful eulogy pronounced upon the Rev. Mr. Clark by Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll:

Upon the grave of the Rev. Alexander Clark I wish to place one flower. Utterly destitute of cold dogmatic pride that often passes for the love of God, without the regard for the neighbor—simple, free and kind—this earnest man made me his friend by being mine. I forgot that he was a Christian, and he seemed to forget that I was not, while each remembered that the other was a man. Frank came to me with a book, which he preached, and looked with the holy eyes of charity upon the failings and mistakes of men. He believed in the power of kindness, and spewed with divine sympathy the hideous gift that separates a fallen from the pure.

Giving freely to others the rights that he claimed for himself, it never occurred to him that his God hated a brave and honest unbeliever. He remembered that even an infidel has rights that love respects; that hate has no such power, and that in order to be a Christian it is not necessary to become less than a man. He knew that no one can be malignant into kindness; that epithets cannot convince; that curses are not arguments, and that the only way to the points towards heaven, with the generosity of an honest man, be accorded to all the fullest liberty of thought, knowing as he did, that in the realm of mind a chain is but a curse.

For this man I entertain the most profound respect. In spite of the taunts and jests of his brethren, he publicly proclaimed that he would treat infidels with fairness and respect; that he would endeavor to convince them by argument and with them with the love of a neighbor. He worshipped loved the wellbeing even an atheist. In this grand position he stood almost alone. Tender, just, and loving where others were harsh, vindictive and cruel, he challenged the respect and love of every honest man. A few more such earnest guides, drive calamity from the lips of faith and render the pulpit worthy of respect.

The heartiness and kindness with which this generous man treated his neighbors, is what I regret that I had not in the past. He admitted that I had not, but he could not lose a single right by the expression of my honest thought. Neither did he believe that a servant could win the respect of a generous master by persecuting and maligning those whom the master would willingly forgive.

While this good man was living his brethren blamed him for having treated me with fairness. But I trust, now that he has left the shore touched by mysterious sea that never yet has borne on any way the treatment of a honest man, this crime will be forgiven him by those who still remain to preach the love of God.

His sympathies were not confined within the prison of a creed, but ran out and over the walls like vines, hiding the rocks from the sun, and with leaf and flower. He could not echo with his heart the feeble sentence of eternal fire, the words of credence and love, with promises for all who will believe, the words of the church—human even to the verge of heresy—causing some to doubt his love of God because he failed to hate his unbelieving fellow men, he labored for the welfare of mankind, and to his work gave up his life with all his heart.

The Two Lost Children.

Recently Master John Henry, aged thirteen, and his sister Alice, aged nine, left their mother's house near Turkey Run, for the purpose of picking berries. The children were familiar with the mountain paths for miles around their home, and consequently when they did not return for dinner their mother was not at all frightened. When the afternoon passed, however, and the shades of night were falling, without the appearance of the youngsters, Mrs. Henry became worried, and started out to look for them. After wandering until dark without finding the children, Mrs. Henry became greatly frightened, and when her husband, who is a miner, returned from work, she insisted on his calling on the neighbors to assist in searching for the lost ones. A number of neighbors were notified, and, as the news spread rapidly, a party of eleven persons soon started out in search of the children. Messengers were at once dispatched to Gilberton, Shenandoah, and Mahanoy City, to see if the children had strayed to either of those places. In the meantime, the search was carried on industriously in the hills that surround the home of the little ones, but up to midnight no clue to their whereabouts was discovered. About this time the messengers returned from the surrounding villages and reported that they could find no trace of the children. The search was carried on diligently, and between 1 and 2 o'clock one of the hunters named Peter H. Mullen heard a faint cry for help issue from a thicket on a hill just above the village of Gilberton, and on running in that direction, came upon an old sink-hole, at the bottom of which he heard the children, who in answer to his inquiries, said they were unwell, but could not get out. Peter's shouts soon brought reinforcements to the spot, and among them came Mrs. Henry, the distracted mother, who had spent the entire night in the hills looking for her little ones. Her joy on learning that they had been found and were uninjured, proved more than her mind could bear, and she fainted. As the pit which the children were in was about fifty feet deep, and had perpendicular sides, the children could not get out without a rope, so one of the party was dispatched to Gilberton, and in about half an hour he returned with the desired article. The rope was fastened around Mr. Henry's waist, and a lantern in his hand was lowered into the dark depths of the pit. The boy was first hoisted up, and then Mr. Henry and the little girl. The children said that they were picking berries when the dark came, and they were standing crumpled beneath their feet, and they were carried to the bottom. Strange to say, beyond a few bruises and scratches, the little ones were unharmed. The boy says the accident occurred about nine or ten o'clock, and consequently they were confined in the pit nearly twelve hours. Fortunately, the sink-hole the children fell into did not, like the majority of such places, contain water, or they would, in all probability have been drowned.—Pittsburg (Pa.) Miners Journal.

Europe's Next War.

The continued concentration of large bodies of troops in the north of Italy, and especially to ward the Austrian frontier, is beginning to be regarded with suspicion in Austria, and to be much commented upon by the English newspapers. From a table lately published in Vienna it appears that when Austria has only 9,500 infantry, 940 cavalry, 1,400 field artillery, 700 garrison artillery, and 200 engineers, or altogether a force of 13,740 men, she sends to the neighborhood of her Italian frontier, Italy, on the other hand, has now assembled 49,700 infantry, 10,360 cavalry, 7,200 field artillery, 3,750 engineers, or a total force of 73,710 men. All the units of the Alpine force are sent to the front, the four fortresses forming the famous quadrilateral being especially strongly garrisoned. It is also well known that much attention has been lately given by the Italian military authorities to perfecting the organization of the so-called Alpine troops—the force which, permanently quartered in the mountains on the northern frontier of Italy, would in the event of the latter country becoming involved in hostilities with either of her neighbors, be immediately called upon to cover the mobilization and concentration of the Italian forces or act as an advanced guard to any forward movement made by them in the prosecution of an offensive campaign. All the units of this Alpine force are always kept on a war footing, and arrangements have been lately made which are designed to insure that the several battalions and batteries shall be ready to take the field at the shortest possible notice. As the Italian Irregular party in Italy is becoming more clamorous, it is not surprising that the strength of the armed forces in the north of Italy should excite some uneasiness in Austria, although it is generally believed in the latter country that unless aided by allies, the Italian army would be altogether unable to cope with that of Austria.—Pittsburg Gazette.

Touching Tale of Zelandia.

Miss Thompson, the English saint, who has had such a wonderful success in catching the fancy of the British public to military pictures, might find a fine opportunity for her talents in the death of Captain Weatherly, formerly of the Royal Dragoons, and his boy in Zelandia. The boy came to be with his father at such a time is not told; but, when the latter recognized that they were in imminent peril, he told the lad to jump on his horse and ride for his life. The young fellow gave the horse a curb which sent him off at a gallop, exclaiming, "I will die with you, father." A correspondent says: "The contrast, I am told, was characteristic. The man was bearded, bronzed and hardy, with a father's tears upon his cheeks, while his blue-eyed fair-haired lad, with much of the beauty of a girl in his appearance, was calmly and with a smile of fond delight leading his father's favorite carbine. The two noble hearts were last seen, the father wounded to death with assegais, clasping his boy's hand with his left, while with his right he cut down the savages. Weatherly was formerly a well-known man in fashionable life in London.
