This goose, which resembles the brant, is found in large numbers on the Island of Huwaii, and a few are always seen about the crater of Haleakala.

It is supposed that they were formerly found on the plains nearer the sen, for the reason Puunenne Plantation derives its name from puunene. (goose hill,) a low elevation standing in the midst of the plantation.

Dr. Edward Armitage of Wailuku some years since procured a pair of these birds and succeeded in domesticating them, so that they remained in his yard, pensioners in common with the domestic breed of geese. They have mated and bred, and the result is that he has a flock of half a dozen. True to their native instincts, however, they are not always content with home life, and occasionally the whole flock rise in the air and fly away, the leader uttering the well known "honk" of the ordinary wild goose. For hours they will float high in the air, in a triangular body, calling faintly down to earth.

Tiring of their explorations, they gradually circle downward and nomeward finally fluttering through the

The Maui Alerts acceptably and, before their present claim that they could have won the teacher took charge the "News" had occasion to remark that the K. of P. Hall, Wailuku, Maui, 'girls sang as they had never; sung be fore;" but Miss Coolege has accomplished the impossible in still improving upon that, for the Maunaolu girls sing to day as they never sang before. Miss Coolege's class exercise gave a glimpse of the method which has made the tones of the girls not only softer and sweeter, but absolutely true. The program was an interesting the masquerade ball to be given by
