A PARISIAN POLICE TRICK.
How a Prominent Viceminister Recovered a Lost Love Letter.

A well known Parisian lady of unexpected social eminence was anxious to recover with secure administration on the part of one of the commissaires of police for wearing in his buttonhole the light blue and white coat of arms of the Legion of Honor. She addressed letters to the prefect of police at Paris and received this functionary to help her to recover the letters.

There is a French law, more honored in the breach than its observance, which demands that no one shall wear in his buttonhole or lapel of his coat the rosette or ribbon of any order without previously having obtained permission of the grand chancelier of the Legion of Honor. No body except members of the army and navy ever goes to the trouble of getting the permission, and I have never known anybody to be sentenced to imprisonment or even fined for the infraction of this statute, if it can be called.

One afternoon the clubman in question was visiting the annual exhibition of pictures at the Cercle de l'Union Artistique when suddenly, while in the act of leaving the club, he was arrested by two policemen in civilian dress, hustled into a cab and driven off to the depot of the prefecture of police.

There he was kept for 24 hours in custody, and was only released late on the following day, with a severe admonition on the part of one of the commissaires of police for wearing in his buttonhole the light blue and white coat of arms of the Legion of Honor. He was without having obtained the permission to do so from the chancelier of the Legion of Honor.

On returning home he found that during his absence a commissaire of police and several assistants had visited his apartment and carefully ransacked his papers—made a perquisition, as it is called in official phraseology—and removed all the letters addressed to him by the viceminister in question.

Of course he was hopeless for him to endeavor to obtain any redress for the outrage thus perpetrated, for in France, notwithstanding almost everywhere else on the continent, the magistrates and judges, instead of being independent, are merely dependent for the maintenance of their positions, for promotion, and for honors in the shape of orders and decorations, upon the government of the day, and especially to the minister of justice, whose obedient and submissive servants they are obliged to be.

That any of them should so far forget what is due to his superiors as well as to his own interests as to render a decision in favor of a prosecutor against the government is deemed, therefore, out of question.—Yankee Blade.

As to Relatives.
Little—Have you any distant relatives?
Match—No, mine are all near enough to visit me at a moment's notice.—Detroit Free Press.

Quar Men.
Mr. Gibson Bowles enquired the English house of commons the other evening by appealing to every member of it "who had been either a husband or a wife."

The Real Answer.
Teacher—When water becomes ice, what is the great change that takes place?
Pupil—The change in price.—Harlem Life.

WOMEN AS GUIDES.

Who They Are Employed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.
The bureau of engraving and printing is the only place in Washington or any other well known place of interest where young women are employed as guides.
The guide is an important person to all visitors and sightseers. His effectiveness hangs on his ability to spin the most extraordinary yarn, to always have an answer ready, whether correct or not, and the man who can pour the most information into a tourist in the least time is the one who flourishes.

That is the regulation government guide. But the bureau of engraving and printing prides itself on a superior brand of guide in the shape of six southern young women. Miss Fannie Gilman, Baltimore; Wilhelmina Ballman of Washington; Mrs. Diana Danforth, Fort Worth, Tex.; Mrs. Mabel Jeffery, Wheeling; Miss McCarthy, Washington; and Mrs. Lottie Adams of Tennessee, who act as guides to all visitors to the bureau. Of course the place where the government makes its money has an overpowering attraction to people from all over the country, and on account of the work done in the building more than the usual number of guides are to the admission of visitors. Indeed it is almost as hard for a person to get out as it is to get in. He or she has been allowed to walk through the main hall alone and out on an office clerk.

Visitors who are taken into the working sections are subjected to close scrutiny that they would relish if it was suggested. These six young women are model guides. They are not appointed not to positions as guides. They have passed civil service examinations and been appointed to actual labor in the mechanical divisions.

The best guides are those who have worked in the greatest number of different divisions, so that they are able to impart information because they understand precisely what operations are being carried on and can answer questions intelligently.

One year ago men were employed for guides, but men's work costs more than women's labor, and so some brilliant chief determined to try girls. It is utterly impossible to allow ordinary guides such as are admitted in other departments to be about among the work going on. It must necessarily be some responsible employee, and the girls who have been chosen for this purpose are the best of their kind.

"Do you ever give visitors souvenirs?" The six looked at each other merrily. "There, that's one of the usual questions. Give them souvenirs! It would be more than our heads are worth trying to. Why, every scrap of paper here has to be accounted for, even those that are spoiled. Everybody wants a souvenir, some little thing like a $100 bill with only one side engraved, or some other trifle. And sometimes they do get awfully mad with us because we can't yield. If they want souvenirs, they have to buy them on the steps outside."

"Do you think you are smarter than men guides?" "Of course we aren't," answered. "You'd better ask the chief. I can tell you, though, that five of us have handled 800 visitors in a day. The captain of the watch divides them up into squads as large as we can command around. You see we are expected not only to give the information, but also to keep our eyes on every motion, because visitors are determined to have a souvenir somehow or other and don't stop to think it is absolutely necessary to make the bureau not to allow them to take anything away."

The hardest thing, though, said a pretty blond haired girl, "is to refuse the gifts visitors want to make us. Of course we are paid for our services and are not allowed to accept presents of money or anything else. Some people really become quite indignant at that, and don't things result. One western woman to whom I had given more than than customary because she had asked sensible questions wanted to give me some money and then offered me other gifts. Of course I tried to explain that it was against the rules of the bureau, when she took out a package of chewing gum. 'Well, I guess they won't mind you're taking some gum,' said she."

The Bachelor's Needlebook.
Have you heard of the "bachelor's needlebook"? It is made larger than the ordinary kind. Take two pieces of cardboard, about 4 by 5 1/2 inches in size, and cover each, on both sides, with brown linen, overlapping it on every right, so all will be smooth. One of the pieces of linen used should have marked, "A Bachelor's Needlebook," in fancy letters, and outlined in olive green, dark brown or red, as desired.

How the boards together at the shorter ends, on one side, fastening two bows of narrow ribbon where the sewing is done. Short ribbons are served on the opposite ends to tie the boards together with several flannel leaves are put in, and in these threaded needles are stuck, the threads being wound back and forth around each needle. All sizes of black and white thread, linen thread, and darning cotton are used.

How Fishes Use Tobacco.
These people, for the sake of making their tobacco go further, cut it up very fine and mix it with finely chopped wood in the proportion of about two parts of tobacco to one of wood. When they are commonly used for the purpose, possibly because they have a slightly aromatic flavor. The mode of smoking the weed thus prepared is very odd. The smoker, after clearing out the bowl of his pipe with a little pecker or bone, picks from his despatch clothing in some conspicuous place a small piece of hair. This he runs down to the bottom of the bowl, the purpose of it being to prevent the fine tobacco from getting into the stem and clogging it up. The pipe is then filled with tobacco, and which it holds only a small quantity. The tobacco is then ignited and all of it is smoked out in two or three strong whiffs. The smoke is very deeply inhaled and is allowed to pass out slowly from the mouth and nostrils.

This method of smoking would be found exceedingly trying by any white man. In fact, it usually brings tears to the eyes of the Eskimos, often producing cholera and almost always a violent fit of coughing. A native will sometimes be almost prostrated from the effects of a single puff. These people carry their readiness for tobacco so far that they will actually set the foot, only refuse from the bottom of a bowl, the smallest portion of which would produce nausea in a civilized person. This habit has been observed in northern Siberia. They also eat the tobacco ash, perhaps for the sake of the potash they contain.—Washington Star.

A Lunatic Peer's Vote.
There is only one well authenticated case of a lunatic having voted in a division either in the house of lords or the house of commons. In 1841, on the occasion when Lord Melbourne's government was defeated by one vote on Sir Robert Peel's motion of want of confidence, the Whigs brought down Lord X., who was a member for a Scotch county, although he was in a state of absolute drizzling idleness, and his vote was duly recorded on the government side.

Mr. Charles Grellier states that "this poor wretch was brought in a chair. They got him into the house and then showed him past the tellers. Charles Howard, Melbourne's private secretary, told me he thought it a monstrous and indecent proceeding."—London Tit-Bits.

THE FALCON I knew a Falcon, swift and peerless, never was called in the place. No bird had ever seen so fast a runner. Of wings so strong as this of mine. —Lowell, "The Falcon."

The nearest approach to the poet's ideal available in this little Paradise (the Pacific) is the Falcon Bicycle. It stands today without a peer in the world of cycles, and has taken first place wherever introduced. It is manufactured by the Yost Manufacturing Company, a firm which has long since acquired a world-wide reputation for the excellence of their numerous productions, notably the famous Yost type writing machines. The reputation of the manufacturer of an article should receive the most careful consideration of an intending purchaser. If their reputation is above suspicion he can have no hesitation in purchasing their goods, even though he may not be altogether familiar with the particular article they may offer for sale, and which he desires to purchase. Although the Falcon Bicycles have only recently been introduced in the Honolulu market they are known all over the continent of America as a wheel of the highest grade. Not only this, but every wheel is accompanied by the Yost Manufacturing Company's GUARANTEE FOR ONE YEAR. In addition to its high state of mechanical perfection the Falcon is by far the easiest running machine in the market. We make this assertion fearlessly, knowing whereof we state. This feature to the Falcon has been brought about by a reduction of friction to the lowest possible point. In other machines the bearings are constructed with fifteen balls, while in the Falcon there are only nine. In the Falcon the bearings are so constructed that the balls have only two points of contact in their track, while in most other machines there are four. In all machines each ball will touch at five points in one revolution of itself. A wheel with fifteen balls in each bearing has therefore 75 points of friction in performing one revolution on its axle. The Falcon bearing being constructed with only nine balls has consequently but 45 points of friction, or 30 points less in each bearing than other machines. Summed up briefly, in all machines there are six axle bearings. Take a wheel of another make, six bearings each containing 15 balls, and 75 points of contact each bearing—450 The Falcon, six bearings and 45 points of contact each bearing—270

Thus making a saving of 180 points of friction in favor of the Falcon over other machines. This is not all, but then we cannot tell you everything in an article of this kind. We ask you to call and examine the Falcon for yourself, when we can demonstrate the details of its construction to your satisfaction. But before closing we would remind you briefly: 1st. That the Falcon is beyond question the best wheel on the market. 2nd. It sells for a lower price than any other high grade wheel. 3rd. It runs easier than any other wheel, having 180 points of friction less. 4th. If you are not in a position to pay cash for a wheel do not go without one on that account, we will give you any reasonable terms you may desire.
