CENTENARY OF CARLYLE.

SKETCH OF THE GREAT SCOT- TISH PHILOSOPHER'S CAREER.

Paper Read Before the Honolulu Scottish Thistle Club on St. Andrew's Eve by Thomas Black.

Thomas Carlyle says, "Subtlety may deceive a man, Integrity never."

In looking over the columns of the Weekly Scotsman of September the 14th I chanced on a notice of the Centenary of the birth of Thomas Carlyle. It ran thus: "It is nearly fifteen years since the death of Thomas Carlyle and the 4th of December next is the anniversary of his birth. It has occurred to some that the event should receive a special recognition in the metropolis of his native land," and so on, but it also occurred to the reader that the event was very highly worthy of recognition outside said metropolis. So I resolved at the next meeting of the Scottish Thistle Club, to bring the matter before them, when it was unanimously agreed that a paper should be read in honor of the event. Carlyle, the subject of our paper this evening, was born at Ecclefechan, on the 4th of December, one hundred years ago. He was the eldest son of James Carlyle, by his second marriage to Margaret Aitken. After Thomas came eight others, three sons and five daughters. The family was prosperous, as Ecclefechan working life understood prosperity. The Carlyle family during childhood around barefooted, but were at all times very cleanly clothed, and the main part of their sustenance seems to have consisted of oatmeal, milk, and potatoes. When Carlyle was five, his father taught him arithmetic, and sent him to the village school, but at an earlier age than that his mother taught him to read. We are told the Carlyles had violent tempers and our subject was no exception. His half-brother John lived with his grand parents, but occasionally visited his parents. One of Carlyle's earliest recollections was that of throwing a little stool at his brother, and breaking a leg of it, and it was at this early age, Carlyle informs us, that he felt for the first time the pangs of loss and remorse. Of his father, Carlyle writes, "I never met a more remarkable man in my journey through life, sterling sincerity in thought, word and deed, most quiet, but capable of blazing into whirlwinds when he felt the humor of a most grim Scandinavian type he occasionally had wit rarely or never-too serious for wit." His mother was a severe Calvinist and watched affectionately over her children's spiritual welfare, and especially over Thomas her firstborn. "She was a woman," says Carlyle, "of to me the forest descent, that of the pious, the just and the wise. No man I may say or any man can have had better parents." With such parents and amidst the honest thrift and frugality of simple Scottish life, Carlyle struggled through his early boyhood and in his tenth year was placed at school in Annan by his father, his first step into a higher life.

When the time arrived to settle his career, some of the Ecclefechan wisacres denounced educating one child more than another, and said that educating a boy had a tendency to cause him to despise his less informed parents, but it was decided in spite of all the uncalculated opinions of the wisacres that to Edinburgh Tam should go. There was nothing luxurious in Scottish college life in those days, not indeed in many instances now. As James Anthony Froude remarks, "Education is a passion in Scotland," and Professor Blackie says, "The Scotchman is a readable animal," and I am certain there is no country has produced greater men in all branches, through greater struggles and sterner endurance and through a firm battling with honest poverty than our own beloved Scotia. It makes me feel good to apostrophize on Scotland. Students in many instances well knew the self-denial needed by parents to bring them through college, and they went with a firm intention of making the most of the opportunity, for at that period, as well as at present, students had often to remain only part of the year at their classes, and during the other months teach or work in order that the slender means at their disposal might be augmented. In those days many advantages were quite out of reach that the poor student of today possesses. Their fare was simpler and doubtless more wholesome, very humble lodgings and economical friends suited their tastes. Their very poverty was a safeguard from extravagant amusements, and their hardy Scotch natures and constitutions enabled them at the end of the term to set out on foot to travel the "long Scots miles" between them and the roof trees. This was the life Carlyle now entered on. Edinburgh was about one hundred miles from Ecclefechan and he was to go there on foot under the protection of an older, and who had been at college a ready. They walked at the rate of twenty miles a day and after arriving and securing a lodging and dinner they went out to view the city. Of course it was all new to Carlyle and left a lasting impression on him. His parents' earnest desire, as was common amongst the Scottish peasantry, was to fit him for the ministry, but he already felt himself most unsuited for it. During Carlyle's college career we are informed he made great progress in mathematics. He only tried once for prizes, and although superior to his classmates the noise prevented him from distinguishing himself. It seems he always felt his best thoughts came to him when alone. After finishing his college career he found pupils, but teaching seems to have been distasteful to him, and it was only that the small income he derived from teaching relieved his father of some of his expenses, and also that being in Annan brought him near his family. His father, who was a mason by trade, had removed from Ecclefechan to a farm, and it was at the farm Carlyle first studied German, a study that was to benefit him greatly in the years to come. The Mainhill house was small, consisting of three rooms, the site was bleak, trees, and swept by winds, but it seems the view obtained relieved it from utter dreariness. On this solitary farm the Carlyles with their eight children lived, four coming to them for holidays, and the father and other sons farming, and from all we can learn making a hard-earned living out of all their labor. They seem everyone of them to have been a family of more than average intelligence. The mother and daughters too doing the house work and tending to the cows and poultry. But indeed we have many instances in Scotland, where as Burns says:

"Burdly child, and clever bairns
Are bred in sic a way as this is."

Carlyle finally abandoned the idea of the ministry and, after two years, school-teaching also. He removed to Edinburgh with the idea of studying law. The family again rendered whatever assistance they could, and with the money derived from pupils and the occasional employment given him by Dr. Brewster (afterwards Sir David Brewster) on his Encyclopaedia, he was enabled to earn during the session £2 per week. At this period Carlyle was attacked with dyspepsia, to which he was a martyr during his entire life and which he likened to a "rat gnawing at his stomach." The pain made him nervous and increased his natural irritability. If time would afford me the opportunity I might tell how all the while he was making himself acquainted with German literature, writing small articles, how he was filled with thoughts struggling for expression, and how finally he abandoned law, and we find him appointed tutor to the Butler family at a salary of £200 per annum. I must now, however, bring before you the woman who was afterwards to become Carlyle's wife. Tradition traced the lineage of Jane Welsh to John Knox and William Wallace, while she was connected to parents and relatives of striking quality. Her grandfather's account to her of their race was "several blackguards among them, but not one blackhead that I ever heard of." Jane Billie Welsh was an only child, born in 1801. She was beautiful, but more than personal beauty, she possessed intellectual beauty. She was an adored child with luxury and comfort at command. Her family was a prominent and leading one at Haddington. She was highly educated, learning music, drawing and modern languages, and with a thirst for knowledge in general. Her mother wrote poetry of a sweet and lyrical kind and Jane inherited the gift, but her own productions, we are told, touched intellectual chords besides. At the age of eighteen she lost her father, her first great grief, for she was passionately attached to him. He was a doctor and in his will left all his property to Jane except an annuity to her mother. She was thus left young, beautiful, talented and an heiress. It was her ambition to become an authoress, and her tutor, Edward Irving, not having time at his disposal to assist her to any extent, thought of his friend Carlyle, and an introduction was the result. At this time the friendship on her part was only of a literary nature. In reading the letters and life of the two, one can easily see that she loved Irving, and it was purely admiration, and a firm conviction that Carlyle would ultimately become famous that drew her to him. Much has been said about the unhappiness of the Carlyles, but I believe the following paragraph which I quote explains as nearly as possible the reasons of unhappiness, if unhappiness there really was. It occurs in a recent review of T. P. O'Connor's work entitled "Some Old Love Stories," and is as follows: "Undoubtedly the study of Carlyle and his wife Jane, and not the least striking part of the Carlyle love story is the courtship which took place before marriage, when Jane Welsh was drawn to her future husband by a feeling of gratified pride that he should be drawn to her. At this time she could say of him, only his tongue should be at liberty, his other members were most fantastically awkward." Mr. O'Connor says: "I have read and re-read the letters which passed between the two at this period; they have the fascination which every authentic human document in a story of tragic marriage must always exercise. In addition, these letters are pictures of two intensely interesting complex, gifted, and historic beings; and they are written with extraordinary literary skill. It would be wrong to describe them as love letters, for alas the two people who wrote them were not in love with each other; but, outside the immortal works of fiction, I don't know any correspondence which conveys so intense a sense of the currents and eddies of feeling, by which men and women are tossed and mocked and undone." In the letters of Mr. Carlyle, too, Mr. O'Connor finds the clue to the unhappy married life of the ill-assorted couple: "Almost a whole library has been written to find the key to the sad mystery of Carlyle and Mrs. Carlyle's unhappiness. To me it seems that all this speculation is far-fetched when we have in these letters the entire, complete and unmistakable key to the heart of the mystery. It is quite true that the letters are unimagined, robust and pithy, to whom passionate love is no essential of marriage, but it is a law of nature with those who are imaginative and ardent and indeed with the vast mass of mankind—that marriage is only tolerable when it is entered by people who are drawn to each other, by the overwhelming force of that mental, moral and above all physical attraction, one to the other, which we summarize in the word Love." There, in Mr. O'Connor's opinion and which he is perfectly right, we have the secret of the long unhappiness which drags through the volumes which tell the sad story of the Carlyles. Having given a brief outline of Carlyle's life, and just before bringing any of his works before you, I am reminded of an incident that happened with Carlyle and a young student. The young student brought an essay to Carlyle for reviewing, and Carlyle after reading it and being asked his opinion told the essayist to read, read, read, read, for the next fifteen years, then write, and if Carlyle were alive and read this paper he might tell me to go and read, read, read, for the next thirty years, then write, for you may remember in his Sartor Resartus he says that it were a real increase to human happiness could all young men from the age of nineteen be covered under barrels and there left to follow their lawful studies and callings till they emerged sadder and wiser at the age of twenty-five. Such gawks are they a foolish peacocks." But of course you all know I have passed the detestable age, and if any of the failings peculiar to these years still remain, I hope all present will bear with me in my humble attempt to pay the highest tribute I can to my deceased venerable countryman, Thomas Carlyle, and in my attempt, I feel as Byron says:

"What I can never express, Yet cannot all conceal."

Few of Carlyle's readers need to be reminded that the subject is no easy one. Carlyle's writings beyond doubt are of wonderful significance and will amply repay every careful study by the most attentive readers. I do not here propose to enter comparisons of Carlyle's teachings with those of former philosophers. I will leave that seriously to an older and abler head. To do otherwise would be to render a paper rather colossal for our requirements here this evening. As essayist, moralist, historian and biographer Carlyle has had few equals. I will make brief mention here of one or two of his essays. His essay on Burns is considered one of the finest ever written. Carlyle shows us clearly that no outside help would have assisted Burns—"counsel, which seldom profits anyone he did not need, seldom is a life morally wrecked but the grand cause lies in some internal mal-arrangement." But it is clearly pointed out towards the close of his essay that the gentry and nobility that sought Burns so much had a good deal to do with his weakness. We cannot but notice a similarity in the opinions of Burns and Carlyle in some things. Both are sternly sarcastic on empty ceremonies and pomps, and both revere and honor humble human worth and integrity. As Carlyle puts it, to quote again from Sartor Resartus, although I will abbreviate it somewhat: "Two men I honor and no third first, the toilworn craftsman, that with earth-made implements conquers the earth and makes her man's. Venerable to me is the hard hand, crooked, coarse, wherein notwithstanding lies a strong virtue, indefeasibly royal, as of the sceptre of this planet. Venerable too is the rugged face, all weather tanned, beset with its rude intelligence, it is the face of a man living manly." "A second man I honor and still more highly, him who is seen toiling for the spiritually indispensable, not daily bread but the bread of life. Those two in all their degrees I honor, all else is chaff and dust, which let the wind blow whither it listeth. Unspeakingly touching it is, however, when I find both dignities united, and he that must toil upward for the lowest of men's wants is also toiling inwardly for the highest. Such a one will take thee back to Nazareth itself."

His essay on "History" is a splendid treatise. In it Carlyle shows us the guiding hand of the invisible, as he says in it: "Whose path is in the great deep of time, whom History reveals, but only all History and in eternity will clearly reveal." I have chosen also to make mention out of his "Heroes and Hero Worship" of our Scottish Reformer, John Knox, as being of special interest to us as Scotchmen. In it he shows how the Puritanism of Knox and Scotland became that of England, of New England, and of the world, but what vexes me is this, that with the indisputable fact of a Knox and a Scotch Reformation, it needed after all Oliver Cromwell with his Ironsides to come and teach Scotsmen the spirit of Puritanism, Scotsmen holding too closely to the letter Scotland and England if united at that time might have succeeded in making the whole world Puritan. However, I would refer you to Carlyle's "Oliver Cromwell's Letters and Speeches," where you will get some splendid information as regards the struggles there existing, and where you will find a very clear insight into the life of the Protector. His "French Revolution" is considered by most critics as the finest treatment of that terrible event ever written. It must have been a work of almost terrible importance to Carlyle himself, for he informs us, after it was written, he gave the manuscript to a friend to review, and it seems the reviewer left it lying on the table at night, and when the servant was looking for paper to light the fire in the morning, she chanced on the manuscript, and took it to light the fire with. With Carlyle's temper we can imagine how it affected him. He seems to have given up the idea of renewing the task, but later on he tells us how he was sitting at the window looking out on a bricklayer, who was laying brick after brick, and how he noticed that day after day the wall began to rise, when it seems to have given him the impetus to try again, with the result that we all know. I have no further time to enter into details of his "Past and Present," his "Essays Miscellaneous and Critical," or into his "German Investigations," many of you will have read the most of his works and some only a few, and if I have succeeded in making those who have read a few wish to read more, and those who have not read any of his works wish to begin, I shall think my little effort has been worth attempting. Carlyle had faults, who has not? but surely we have a right to forget the faults of genius. We see the many obstacles he overcame, how he struggled through comparative poverty, to the height of fame, and has left a name to be handed down for generations. His troubles no doubt made him irritable and unreasonable, often in trifles, but his heart was generous and sympathetic, as we can see. Many times in his poorest days, working hard and scant of money, we find him scraping together what will send a present to his mother, to whom he was devoted. While struggling through his own

MORTUARY REPORT.

Record Not Excessive as compared With Previous Years.

There were sixty deaths in the district of Honolulu for the month of November. From 1891 to 1894 inclusive the numbers respectively were 57, 36, 60 and 46. Hawaiians greatly preponderate in the mortality. The annual death rate per thousand for the month was 25.72, and the rates by nationalities were as follows: Hawaiians 40, Asiatics 17.33, all others 18. The deaths by nationalities were: Hawaiians 35, Chinese 10, Portuguese 4, Japanese 3, British 3, Americans 3, others 2. By sexes there were 39 males and 21 females. The number unattended was 15. As to ages, the greatest mortality was from 20 to 30, seventeen, and the next from 1 to 5, nine. The total from under 1 to 20 was eighteen.

Consumption and whooping cough were even as the most prolific causes with seven each, and old age next with six. Fever claimed five; typhoid fever, heart disease and influenza three each; dropsy, hemorrhage and paralysis two each, while alcoholism, abscess, apoplexy, beriberi, brucellosis, Bright's disease, child-birth, cancer, convulsions, croup, drowning, elephantiasis, inanition, inflammation of brain, knife wound, meningitis, obstruction of bowels, pneumonia, rheumatism and unknown numbered one each.

Her Teeth Punctured Her Tire.

A Chester lady, prominent in society, was spinning along the Darby Telford road on her bicycle when a sudden sneeze sent her false teeth flying over the machine. Instantly dismounting she searched in vain for the molars, and reluctantly remounting the wheel, pedaled homeward. The loss worried the lady, whose social functions were numerous, and as her teeth had often been admired a new set meant social oblivion for several days. While her pretty brow was drawn together in perplexity she noticed an excrescence on the tire, and dismounting for the second time, she was surprised and overjoyed to find the false teeth sticking like a burr in the pneumatic tire, which they had punctured. — Philadelphia Record.

Says the Arizona Gazette: Some months ago a Tempe man named his girl baby after Queen Victoria and wrote to the Queen to that effect. Not hearing from her majesty, he changed the child's name to Hannah and went out and pounded the first Englishman he met.

It is said that the largest diamond in the world was found a short time ago in the mines of Bahia de Perugus, Brazil. The gem is reported to weigh 3100 carats, which is 2129 carats heavier than the largest existing diamond.

Suffred City Life.

A sixteen-foot alligator crawled out of the St. John river, at the foot of Main street, Jacksonville, Fla., one day last week and leisurely waddled up the street toward the center of the city. Main street is one of the principal streets in Jacksonville, and the appearance of the alligator created a good deal of consternation among the hundreds of people there. Every man with a pistol started shooting at the reptile, but the bullets did not worry it a bit. After promenading four blocks and squealing with its tail a too familiar newsboy, it received a wound from a rifle which caused it to slow up a little. Then it started up a leaning telegraph pole, thus exposing its vulnerable parts, and was soon shot to death. Nine big alligators have been killed recently at the foot of Main street, but this is the first that has ventured up town.—Ex.

This is the Medicine That Makes People Well!

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co.,
Gentlemen:—I was very much run down, had no appetite at all, was very nervous, had no sleep night or day; to sum it all up, I WAS PERFECTLY WRETCHED. But thanks to Paine's Celery Compound I can now eat and sleep and work just as well as I could before I was taken sick. When I commenced taking the Compound I weighed 136 pounds; I now weigh 168 pounds and do all the work for my family of five. I have recommended the Compound to three families already and they are very much pleased with it. I am now taking my fifth bottle, and would RECOMMEND IT TO ALL WHO ARE SUFFERING WITH STOMACH TROUBLE OR NERVOUS TROUBLE.
Yours respectfully,
MRS. AUG. DARROW.

CANE VS. BEET SUGAR.

Since the printing of an editorial note yesterday, commenting on the claim of Professor Koebig that beet sugar, granulated, was equal to cane sugar, the following is noticed in the sugar market review of the Hawaiian Commercial Journal:

Whatever may be the outcome in the future the indications are that beet sugar will not continue to have the influence on the cane sugar market in the future that it has had in the past. In Europe consumers are beginning to demand cane sugar from dealers, while formerly they did not stop to enquire what they were getting. Mr. Henry Waterhouse received a letter from a correspondent in Glasgow, Scotland, who is thoroughly posted on the sugar situation, who writes that "sugar factors say consumers are insisting on their dealers supplying them with cane sugar instead of other kinds, in consequence of which the outlook for the cane product is greatly improving."

James Dunn, a large sugar factor in Glasgow, Scotland, and lately Hawaiian Consul there, told the writer of these lines, in an interview at the Hawaiian Hotel six years ago, that cane sugar would always hold the supremacy over beet sugar in the markets of the world. He also expressed the opinion that raw sugar might be exported round the Horn to European markets at a profit, if the necessity ever arose for such a disposition of the Hawaiian product. While there is no doubt that the production of beet sugar in the United States will continue to increase for some time, it is equally certain that the consumption of sugar in that country will also increase and perhaps in a greater ratio than the production. There is under the circumstances no imminent danger to our chief industry, nor any reason why the area of land under sugar cane should not be increased.

OBSERVATIONS.

All over the English-speaking world, and even beyond, today the press and the platform will do honor to the memory of Thomas Carlyle, who was born one hundred years ago. The writings of this great philosopher will endure in English classics for all time. In this issue appears a paper on the subject of the centenary, written by a young Scotchman of Honolulu, which gives a terse biography of Carlyle together with some references to his literary remains.

C. P. Huntington contributed two Murillos to a loan exhibition at the Mark Hopkins Institute of Art in San Francisco. They were "Francis d'Assisi in the Land of Strangers" and "St. Gregory de Paul," and these two old masters were exhibited then for the first time in the United States. More than forty local picture-owners contributed to the exhibition. A loan exhibition conducted by the Kilauea Art League between its semi-annual exhibitions would probably be popular in Honolulu.

It can hardly be a coincidence that since the existing coal oil test law came into force there has been a great diminution in the number of fires. Previously alarms used to come in one, two, three or more within the space, often, of not more than a week or ten days. And, as the engines returned from a more or less lively blaze, the word went round, "Lamp exploded in a Chinese house." The authorities ought not to allow these times to recur.

WIRTH'S CIRCUS.

Barring Accidents It Will Open Tomorrow Night.

About one hundred and fifty small boys with a fair sprinkling of men have been engaged in superintending the erection of the big tent and other paraphernalia which will house the circus people for some weeks to come, but they will be out of a job by tonight, for by that time a high board fence will have been completed on the two vacant sides of the lot and all outsiders shut out.

The big tent is in place and workmen were engaged this morning in erecting the low circular enclosure within which will be the scene of the performances. Peter High has charge of the necessary carpenter work which is being done and by the time he gets through the small boy will not even have a chance to peep through or under the canvas.

There will be no full dress rehearsal for the press or anybody else tonight as stated in a morning paper, but the horses will be exercised in the ring tomorrow morning and afternoon to take the stiffness out of their legs.

It is hoped to be able to give the first performance tomorrow evening if the necessary arrangements are completed by that time.

CHILD STRAYED.

Four-year Old Son of Turnkey Evans Missing Since Morning.

At 8 o'clock this morning the four-year old son of Harry Evans, turnkey of the police station, became missing to his mother from their home on Fort street. Mrs. Evans searched the whole neighborhood in vain, then notified her husband by telephone. The police all over town were instructed to look for the child. When Mr. Evans told a BULLETIN reporter of the matter at 12 o'clock no clue to the child's whereabouts had been discovered. Mr. and Mrs. Evans were naturally in great distress, especially as the child is of a venturesome disposition.

LATER.—A telephone message brings the joyful news that Harry von Holt found the child at the top of Nuuanu valley at 12:45 o'clock.

A Pleasant Gathering.

One of the pleasantest social events which has taken place for a long time occurred on Saturday evening last at the residence of Thomas Smith on Piikoi street, where a number of his friends gathered to celebrate the return of Mrs. Smith and children from a trip to England and to welcome Mr. Smith's father, who came back with Mrs. Smith on a short visit to his son. The party gathered at the residence of Thomas McTighe and from thence proceeded to Mr. Smith's house, taking with them a bountiful supply of refreshments of all kinds and the Kawaihau Club who furnished singing and music for the occasion. The evening was spent in social enjoyment, dancing and singing, and to those present was most enjoyable.

Those who participated were: T. McTighe and wife, J. B. Gibson and wife, P. M. Lucas and wife, David Crozier, J. S. Murrehead, Stephen Smith, A. Gillilan and mother, Mrs. Wilson and others.

G. R. Harrison, practical piano and organ maker and tuner, can furnish best factory references. Orders left at Hawaiian News Co. will receive prompt attention. All work guaranteed to be the same as done in factory.

THE HEALANI BOAT CLUB.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS IN SESSION YESTERDAY.

Captain Herrick's Report on Necessary Improvements—Another Boat Expected from Australia.

The Board of Directors of the Healani Yacht and Boat Club held an important meeting yesterday afternoon at the Chamber of Commerce.

Captain Herrick presented a long report on the improvements and repairs considered necessary to be made to the club's boat-house. About one-half of the recommendations advocated by Captain Herrick were endorsed by the Board of Directors and the balance referred to a special committee of three consisting of T. F. Lansing, C. E. Herrick and E. D. Waldron.

The Board of Directors are considering the advisability of leasing a small bathhouse in the immediate vicinity, owing to the crowded condition of their own. It will be used as a storehouse for extra boats if the lease is made. The number of boats belonging to the club is increasing so rapidly that extra room must be provided somewhere.

Among the projected improvements which will shortly be inaugurated by the Healani is the establishment of a reading room and purchase of more pleasure boats for evening parties and day-light excursions.

Another four-oared practice boat is expected to arrive by the Alameda from the Colonies next Thursday, which will further add to the present crowded condition of the boat-house.

From the above the flourishing condition of the club is apparent to anyone and the influence of the new captain is already making itself felt.

"A PROPER LUAU."

Given at S. Peck's Vineyard Street Residence Last Night.

About three hundred people attended the luau given by Mr. S. Peck to his friends on the occasion of the first birthday of his child. The house and grounds were beautifully decorated with flags, ferns and Japanese lanterns. The feast proper was given in a large tent erected for the occasion which was completely covered with flags and artistically lighted with numerous lanterns. Every delicacy of the season was provided, cooked in either Hawaiian or European style, and there was an abundance of everything to eat or drink.

The music was provided by a number of old-time native musicians who had been assembled from all parts of the island. Their playing and singing added much to the enjoyment of the guests.

During the evening a handsome purse was made up by a few friends for the youngster whose first birthday was the cause of the celebration and the amount is to be deposited in the bank as the nucleus of a future fortune.

It was long after midnight when the affair broke up, and everyone went home saying that Mr. Peck had given his friends "a proper luau."

CENTENARY OF CARLYLE.

care, assisting again and again his brother John in his medical course, how can we help admiring him all the more when we think that like numbers more of our great men, he sprang from Scotland's "hardy sons of rustic toil." In such cases, success and fame were not got with ease, for difficulties had to be surmounted, and trials overcome, unknown to those born in affluence or with no necessity to strive for any goal. It must seem indeed a picture for reverence on our part, when we think of the honest humble home, the loving brothers and sisters, waiting a anxiously for all the news from the brother outside of the fold, and the tender messages sent from the God-fearing mother, along with the weekly supplies of butter and oatmeal, and the wise counsel and serious advice of the "priest-like father," who was one of the type of quiet and undemonstrative Scottish fathers, still to be met with in our native land. But I need not detain you longer with word pictures of Carlyle's home circle, the hardy stock from which he sprang, his power of endurance, or the integrity and intelligence of the entire family, for—

"From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur springs,
That makes her loved at home, revered abroad,
Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
An honest man's the noblest work of God."

RULED OFF THE TRACK.

Burlingame Can Ride no More at Bay District Park.

The race horses which were sent from Honolulu to San Francisco have been the cause of much comment there, which seems to be justified by their erratic performances. Ka Moi is evidently outclassed with the Coast equines and only succeeded in getting in ninth in a field of nine in his only race in the last month. On the 5th of November Amarino, ridden by Burlingame, came in fourth in a field of four in a five-and-a-half furlong race and would seem to have been equally out of luck in all his races.

Lolokalani is the only Hawaiian horse that has won a race in San Francisco and, as will be seen later, it might have been better for her owner if she had not. On November 12th she came in sixth in a field of eight in a five-furlong race, the betting being 60 to one against her. On the following day, however, in a race over the same distance with ten entries, she came in first. Time 1:02 1/4. This was an unexpected win, as long odds were placed against the horse, and the sequel thereto is that her jockey and owner, Claude Burlingame, has been ruled off the Bay District track and can never ride another race thereon.

The San Francisco Call of the 16th contains the following, which tells the story: "The acrobatic running of the Honolulu horses has caused considerable comment. The unexpected win of Lolokalani on November 12th caused the board of stewards to make some inquiries. The running and wild plunges on Amarino yesterday capped the climax. Schreiber laid 30 to 1 against this horse, but he was cut down to 8 to 5, money pouring in on the Honolulu horse. Amarino did not get any part of the money, but it was principally due to being cut off several times. The board of stewards met at the conclusion of the race and decided that Claude Burlingame could not ride again at the Bay District track."

The last mail to take Xmas greetings to Europe and America this year, will leave here Dec. 6th. See what King Bros have in the way of cards for the purpose.

The Kona-Kau Telephone and Telegraph Company has elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: G. C. Hewitt, president; C. D. Miller, vice-president; L. S. August, secretary and treasurer, and M. F. Scott, auditor. The directors are C. M. Walton, Geo. Clark and G. W. McDougall Jr.

ADDRESSED TO THE YOUNG MAN WHO WANTS A TANDEM.

Young man, you will do well to wait until you see the Tribune Tandems, which will be the finest manufactured, embodying all the latest improvements up to 1896. Don't be deceived into buying a lot of Stearns' "Yellow Fellows" that are back numbers and were manufactured in 1894 and sold on the western shores in 1895 as up to date, when they are not. We have reason to believe and are so informed by reliable San Francisco agents that the "Stearns" wheels that have been imported and placed on sale here are not of the latest pattern, and hence caution would-be purchasers to look out for themselves and not be deceived into buying an antiquated wheel.

One of the largest dealers in bicycles in the United States furnishes us with the following information in regard to the "Stearns" wheel for publication:

"This is a wheel that, owing to the nice finish and the fact that they were the first to get out an adjustable handle bar, took quite a spurt, but we have known of many cases where they have not given satisfaction. The writer in October, 1894, bought a 'Stearns' wheel that was badly out of order in December. He sold it to a friend of his and it has been the cause of complaint constantly since. At the same time two 'Stearns' ladies' wheels were purchased, and they have been a source of expense and annoyance ever since, until the two ladies owning them sold them at a sacrifice and bought Tribunes, and they claim that the Tribune wheel is far superior to the Stearns."

These facts speak for themselves. We ask any intending purchaser to take one of the Stearns wheels to any first-class mechanic and have him take it apart and compare it with the corresponding features of the Tribune wheel. We know that an honest opinion would be that the Tribune is by far the better wheel and hence make the challenge.

We have some Tribune Tandems on the way here direct from the factory. The reason we did not get them on the Australia was because they were not finished. Everybody remembers Punch's advice to people about to get married, which was "Don't." We give the same advice to those about to purchase a Stearns tandem or single wheel. Call and examine the Tribunes; they are far superior in every respect and won't eat up your wages in repairs.

We have ten boys' and girls' wheels for Christmas, and we intend to sell every one of them.

Mrs. Geo. E. Boardman will hold her annual Christmas sale at her residence, Kapiolani and Kinau streets, beginning next Thursday, Nov. 5. Fancy articles of all descriptions now ready for inspection.

The charges and countercharges which resulted from transactions between a hackdriver and a bar-keeper last Saturday afternoon have been satisfactorily adjusted and were dismissed in the Police Court this morning.

S. Luce was this morning found guilty of poisoning two dogs which were in the habit of destroying his poultry, eggs and flowers, and fined ten dollars and costs. He claims to have acted under the advice of Marshal Brown and has appealed from Judge Perry's decision.

Much of Judge Perry's time was taken up this morning with the examination of Kubia, charged with violating the hack regulations by using abusive language to hack inspector Macy. He was defended by Paul Neumann and Chas. Creighton, but found guilty and fined one dollar and costs $3.30.

Wong Look, the Chinese murderer, recently sentenced to imprisonment for life, soon served out his sentence, for he died yesterday afternoon. He tried to starve himself to death. The prison surgeon thinks his death was caused by internal injuries sustained in previous attempts at suicide.

George Cochran Broome and Eugene Bashaw, Americans, have taken the oath to the constitution. Also, the following pupils of the Normal school, thus qualifying themselves to take positions as substitute teachers if required: Mrs. Sara E. Greene, Juliet M. King, American; Myra W. Angus, British; Hannah Jarrett, Lizzie McCriston, Mapuana Smith, Hawaiians.

JUDICIARY JOTTINGS.

Judge Whiting Renders Two Decisions at Chambers.

In a decision today, Judge Whiting finds that petitioner has proved the necessity of the appointment of a guardian of W. C. Lane. He regrets that the parties could not agree upon the same person, as all the nominees are proper persons. Therefore he confirms Mr. Lane's own nomination, which is that of Cecil Brown Kinney for petitioner; Humphreys for respondent.

Upon the appeal of plaintiff, in the assumpsit suit of Hawaiian Gazette Company vs. F. Godfrey, and J. F. Clay, clerk of Senate, garnishee, Judge Whiting affirms the judgment of the District Court, he being of opinion that the defendant was not a Government beneficiary as described in the law of 1890, providing for the garnishment of salaries of Government employees. Humphreys for plaintiff; Robertson for defendant.

BAD OIL MUST GO.

Its Seller Liable to Prosecution for Breach of Law.

A few days ago the BULLETIN reported exclusively the arrival of 500 cases of Russian coal oil that would not stand the fire test, also that the consignee was trying to dispose of it for fuel purposes. The Hawaiian Commercial Journal says that the oil has been sold for use as fuel.

Samuel McKeague, keeper of the kerosene warehouse, answers an inquiry by telephone, saying the consignee told him he had sold the oil. The keeper will not deliver the oil, however, except under an order from the Government, as the law is very strict against the importation of oil below 115 degrees flash test. He added that the matter was now in the hands of the Marshal.

Marshal Brown, on being asked if he had permitted the oil to be taken out, answered: "No sir. It must be exported. The man who sold it is liable to hear from the Attorney General, as the sale is a clear violation of the law."

BEET SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Valuable Information About Its Consumption and Production.

Appropos of the announcement that Claus Spreckels intends still further to enlarge his sugar-beet operations in California the San Jose Mercury publishes the following valuable information:

The growth of the beet sugar industry in the United States during the past few years has been marvelous. In 1890 the country produced only 6,000,000 pounds; in 1891, 10,000,000 pounds; in 1892, 18,000,000 pounds; in 1893, 43,000,000 pounds; in 1894, 60,000,000 pounds. The direct result of the McKinley law was a marked increase in production, thus saving some millions of dollars for the country and distributing vast sums to American wage-earners, besides reducing the price. There never was a more striking example of the benefits resulting from fostering a home industry. The consumption per capita of sugar of all kinds has increased from 24.1 pounds per annum in 1867 to 63.4 in 1893, and the Louisiana Planter is authority for the statement that it is now 77. Accepting the latter figure, the annual consumption of sugar of all kinds in the United States is 5,390,000,000 pounds, and in the year ending June 30, 1894, we imported 4,345,193,881 pounds, valued at $126,871,889. During the same period we exported 14,778,416 pounds, valued at $653,052. As to the quantity of cane sugar produced in this country last year we have not the figures at hand, but in 1893 it amounted to 450,000,000 pounds. Calling it 500,000,000, and adding to those figures the 60,000,000 pounds of beet sugar made last year, we have a total production of only 560,000,000 pounds to meet a demand of 5,390,000,000 pounds.

"It will be readily seen, therefore, that the possibilities of the beet-sugar industry are practically limitless. This country should supply its own market, and if the Republican policy of protecting the industry by means of a bounty is revived the industry will expand into prodigious proportions. Mr. Spreckels and other manufacturers doubtless believe that it will be. Germany last year paid $5,781,250 in sugar bounties, France $10,000,000, Austria $2,000,000 and Belgium $5,000,000. "At Watsonville last year, according to a report made by a committee of agriculturists from Yolo County who were delegated to visit the factory, to growers alone the sum of $650,000 was disbursed, $150,000 was paid to operatives, clerks, etc., and the supplies of wood, limestone, etc., cost between $100,000 and $150,000. Similar statistics were obtained at Alvarado."

Scrofula

The Worst Case the Doctors Ever Saw

Hood's Sarsaparilla Perfectly Cured

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass."

"Dear Sirs—I wish to testify to the great value of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For some time I had been troubled with scrofula, which early last winter assumed a very bad form.

Sores Appeared on My Face and hands and gradually increased in number until they reached to my shoulder. The doctors said it was the worst case of scrofula they ever saw and also went so far as to say it was incurable. I tried ointments and other remedies but to no avail. A friend recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla, and although I was completely discouraged, as a last chance I resolved to give it a trial. After taking one bottle I noticed the sores had commenced to heal. After the sixth bottle they were all healed.

I continued to take it, however, until I had used nine bottles, and now I am perfectly well."

"A BUILDING BURNED RECENTLY in Milwaukee, without insurance, because a clerk FORGOT to renew certain policies promptly as instructed. "He was discharged. "A few days later, the owner died without insurance on his life, leaving a widow and three young children in poverty, because he had NEGLECTED to insure. As procrastination is more culpable than forgetfulness perhaps the owner is having his punishment NOW. "MORAL! Consultation and office treatment free. Special attention given to procrastinators."
