The first time the writer traveled down the western the southern to southern to southern be writer traveled down the western the southern portion is generally spoken of as the San Joaquin plain. The first time the writer traveled down the western side of this valley, near the coast range, dwelling houses were twenty to thirty miles apart, and one individual was met who expressed a desire 6 move to some new country, as it was getting too thickly settled that he has found a "lodge in some vast wilderness," where foot of man will not tread wilderness," where foot of man will not tread until he is gathered to his fathers. At that time fleet-footed antelope could be seen skim-ming over the plain, and here the writer made his first ineffectual attempt to shoot one. At night the only sounds to be heard were the lonely, mournful cry of the burrowing owl and the night heron, and the disurd head of the the night heron, and the dismal howl of the the night heron, and the dismal howl of the coyote or prairie wolf. To-day the level plain is checkered by orchards, vineyards and grain fields, and villages and school-houses sprinkle the surface and discover the presence sprinkle the surface and discover the presence of civilization. What will this valley be twenty or fifty years hence? What will a century make of it? It would not have to be populated so thickly as some European coun-tries, and less productive ones, to accommo-date and sustain half of the present population of the United States. This valley is five hundred miles in length by fifty to sixty in breadth, and occupies a When your correspondent by fifty to sixty in intension, and exact. It is great portion of the interior of the state. It is divided into three parts, the Sacramento, San and dusty, business was almost dead, and the weather was hot, the plains dry, barren and dusty, business was almost dead, and divided into three parts, the Sachanetro, and Joaquin and Tulare valleys, but it is really one vast level plain from northern to southern limit. The southern portion is generally spoken of as the San Joaquin plain. The first time the writer traveled down the western is that the coast range. The weather was delightful; work of magic. The weather was delightful; dwelling houses were twenty to thirty miles the fields of grain and the pasture lands beapart, and one individual was met who came beautifully green; the large oak forest expressed a desire 6 move to some new country, as it was getting too thickly settled for him there. Poor man! It is to be hoped that he has found a "lodge in some vast wilderness," where foot of man will not tread until he is gathered to his fathers. At that time fleet-footed antelope could be seen skim-ming over the plain, and here the writer made his first ineffectual attempt to shoot one. At night the only sounds to be heard were the lonely, mournful cry of the burrowing owl and the night heron, and the dismal howl of the coyote or prairie wolf. To-day the level the night heron, and the dismal howl of the coyote or prairie wolf. To-day the level plain is checkered by orchards, vineyards and grain fields, and villages and school-houses weather continued until late in the spring, and sprinkle the surface and discover the presence of civilization. What will this valley be the rains did not con of civilization. What will this valley be twenty or fifty years hence? What will a century make of it? It would not have to be populated so thickly as some European coun-tries, and less productive ones, to accommo-date and sustain half of the present population of the United States. As the train bore us on southward through Fresno county, the sun dropped behind the western range and ere we frached the timbered region along King's river, near the line of Tuatare county, night was upon us. And 'twas
