No gratuitous issues of food or clothing were made during the month except for meals at the Kwajalein Labor Camp to a few transients and native delegates enroute to the Christmas Missionary Conference in Majuro.

A Christmas party was given at the Labor Camp for the natives on Christmas Eve, and a punch was served with cakes, cigarettes and candy. The Red Cross donated razor kits, shaving cream, dolls and teddy bears. The dolls and teddy bears were given to a few children, and the women were given cloth, needles and yarn. Commodore Seitz presented the gifts to the women and children and Base officers and their families attended the affair. The natives alternately sang Marshallese and American songs and seemed to thoroughly enjoy the occasion.

The native children attended a Christmas party given for dependents' children at the Base chapel on Christmas Eve. A Santa Claus dispensed presents to Americans and Marshallese alike and one Marshallese child took part in a Yuletide play depicting the Nativity.
