. Insurance Again.

To the Editor of the Herald: With many other interested ones I read with pleasure the letter of Mr. P. C. Jones in your paper, and am glad we have at last found the man who says, "Come." His scheme is a good one and it is to be hoped will take definite shape at once, and the city canvassed for subscribers to the shares of a "Home Mutual Fire Insurance Co." The remarks of Mr. Berger are all right from his standpoint as a monopolist, but there is another side to the question, which is the arbitrary rating of the agents of the foreign companies here, and giving as a reason (?) the amount of losses sustained by the companies at the last fire. Now it strikes me that some of them should go slow in such statements, when the kind and time of some of those risks were taken. The San Francisco rates cannot be taken as a basis here. Everything is against them, and in our favor, excepting in one very important matter to the companies, which is the Fire Marshal. In San Francisco he is ap-Marshal. In San Francisco he is appointed by the Board of Underwriters; his duty is to ascertain, it possible, the ceuse of a fire, and report thereon. He is supposed to know (and does) as to the storage of explosives of all kinds, kerosene, etc. How is it here? By whom is the Fire Marshal appointed? And is he able to give the desired information as to the amount of kerosene in the city in shops and stores? Or the number of cases burned at the great fire? All this is relevant to the insurance companies, as well as to the insured. The law provides "that only five cases shall be stored in any one room," but a "room" of 20 feet square may be cut up by partitions to hold to or 15 cases. These are a few of the reasons why the monopolists aver that "a local company, will not pay." It at annual meetings is hereby suspended. Menwill pay, because enough stock can be secured in this city to pay the subscribers to insure in their own interests, and Mr. Berger's reason (?) for not organizing a local company, 'hat "it would be liable to extinction at any time by a large fire"!!! would be amusing were it not ridiculous, se again I say, go ahead, Mr. Jones.

Mr. Russell Sage was the pioneer who invented "puts," "calls," "spreads" and "straddles," He began dealing in them when he first came to Wall street in 1861, after his mist came to wall strest in 1801, after me withdrawal from congress, and he has been dealing in them over since; and the stock markets of the world have taken up this ingenious speculative device of Mr. Sago's, and stock privileges are just as well known on the continental bourses to day and in the London market as they are here, and they are largely dealt in. Perhaps not so largely as here, because the device is American and an outcome of American genius, but transcontinental speculators could not fail to see the advantages they offered and have perforce adopted them. London declares that the nomencla-ture, so far as "apreads" and "straddles" are concerned, is not refined, and call them differ-ently, but what they deal in are American stock privileges just the same.

MADE AS CLEAR AS DAY.

"And what are 'puts, 'calls,' 'spreads' and 'straddles'!" asked the writer when he first went down on Wall street.

"Well," said John E. McCann, the confidential clerk of Russell Sage, of whom the question was asked, "I'll tell you if you if question was asked, "I'll tell you'll you if you if you promise never to mention the postical subject again. It requires pretty deft wording to make the thing clear, so it is not an exhibitating subject to talk on. You hear a good deal about 'puts' and 'calls,' but I venture to say there are 50,000,000 persons in the United States who do not know what they are, nor what the meaning is of the word treatilesses.' Now a privilege is a contract by 'privileges.' Now a privilege is a contract by which the maker of it, Russell Sage, S. V. Walte, Jay Gould or Harvey Kennedy, en-gages to purchase from the holder in the one case, or to sell to the holder in the other case, a number of shares of some specified stock, at a certain price at any time within a cer-tain period at the option of the holder. Got that?

A "CALL" EXPLAINED. "A 'call' is a privilege bought of the maker at a certain price, and the owner of it is priv-ileged to call for a certain amount of stock at a given price, within thirty, sixty or ninety days, four or aix months. If a man holds a 'put' he has the right to deliver to the maker of the privilege a stock at a certain agreed on within a certain number of days. Clear! Well, let's try onex more.

No. Well, let's try onex more.

"Suppose Western Union is selling at 70. A man wants a sixty day 'put' on it at 66, because be believes the stock is going down. He gives Mr. Sage, Mr. White, Mr. Kennedy or Mr. Gould 1 per cent. on the amount of stock he wants to deal in. A hundred shares is usual, and 1 per cent. is $100. He receives in return a slip of paper signed by either one or the other of these gentlemen. Then if Western Union goes below 65 within sixty days, he may buy it for whatever it is selling for below that price and 'put' it to the maker of he may buy it for whatever it is selling for below that price and 'put' it to the maner of the privilege at the price agreed on, 63, and receive a check for $0,000. The holder makes the difference. Ah, you understand. If telegraph does not go below 66 the holder is out his $100. The 'call' business operates ex-actly in the opposite way. A man buys the privilege of calling Western Union at 75 when it is selling at 70. If it sells above 75, you can call on the maker of the privilege for 100 shares at 75, and the 100 shares are thus bought by the holder for $7,500, and be turns around and sells it at 80, if the stock is selling there, and pockets the difference."

The holder of one may 'put' stock to the maker of the privilege or 'call' for it. 'Straddies' come high, because there is money in them whichever way the market may go. If the market does not go all, but stands still, why, the maker is in the money he has been paid for the privilege, usually about 8 per cent, or $300. A spread is also a 'put' and and a 'call' combined, but there is this differ-ence, a 'straddle' is made at the market. That is to say, the maker of the privilege takes the risk that the stock in question does not move to any extent from the price at which it is selling when the privilege is sold. In a 'spread' the maker has more leeway. If Western Union is selling at 70, to go back to Western Union is selling at 70, to go back to the old illustration, the unaker of the privilege sells a "spread," say at 67 and 80. If it goes below 67, the bolder can put the stock and make the difference, and if it goes above 80, the holder can 'call' it at that price and reap the profits. But so long as the price of the stock keeps within those points the maker of the privilege is safe. To put it, in another way, the holder of a 'straddle' will make if the market for the stock he is dealing in moves at all. The holder of a 'spread' doesn't make anything until the market moves past certain limits. There is one thing more, the maker of a privilege only receives the money for which he sells the privilege, while the holder may make thousands—or nothing.—

Streets of the French Capital.

The streets of Paris are the best in the world, and its boulevards lined with trees and having sidewalks 20 feet wide run for miles in different directions through the various parts of the city. The pavements of the sidewalks are generally smooth flagstones, and that of the rondway asphalt, wood or stone blocks evenly laid and free from holes. The streets are kept scrupulously clean. They are washed every morning with a hose, and swept so well that one might drop a handkerchief and pick it up without soiling it. The smoothness of the streets takes away the noise found in the chief. thoroughfares of New York or London. The 15,000 cabs and numberless other vehicles glide aliently over the smooth roads, and an ordinary conversational tone can be pleasurably used upon the promenade.—Frank J. Carpenter in Cleveland Leader.

The Sale of Lincoln's Photographs.
The sale of President Lincoln's picture remains steady, and dealers are never without it. It is not a generally known fact that there is but one negative of President Lincoln in existence. This negative, which was taken by Brady, of Washington, is broken into two by Brady, of Washington, is broken into two parts, the broak having occured just above the shoulder and extending almost perpendicular, inclining a little to the right, the longer way of the plate. Unless the picture is examined very closely, however, it would not be guessed that it was printed from a broken plate.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

DEATH.

O Death, the Consecrator!
Nothing so expetities a name
As to be written—dead;
Nothing so wins a life from blame
So covers it from wrath and shame
As close the burial bed.

O Death, the Revelators Our deepest passions as ver move Till thou hast bid them wake; We know not half how much we love Till all below and all above Is shrouded for our sake.

O Death, the great Pencemaker!
If camily have come between
There's maught like Death to heal it;
And if we love—O priceless pain,
O bitter-awect when love is valua
There's naught like Death to seal it.

He Chased a Shadow.

As the engineer of engine 1,277, on the Wabash, pulled out of Given, en route for Ottumwa, one evening recently, he noticed what appeared to be a small animal hopiping along the track ahead of the pilot. Gradually he increased the speed of the locomotive, but the little quadruped seemed also to have "dropped anoshor notch," and despite the tremendous gait of '77 casily retained its position. Disgusted beyond expression, the engineer began heaving chunks of coal at it, but all in vain. It seemed to bear a charmed life, and successfully baffled all endeavors of the engineer and fireman to check its wild career. For twenty one miles the engineer had chased that delusive object, and thoroughly disgusted he gave up the race at Ottumwa, and He Chased a Shadow. the gave up the race at Ottumwa, and stopped. The object stopped also. With his pick in hand the engineer made a sneak on the animal, harmless, but possessed of such anomalous migratory possessed of such anomalous migratory powers. With quick precision he brought the pick down full on the animal's back, but a "sickening thud" was the only sound he heard, and with a wild laugh he arose, thenceforth to be a raving maniac. For a full hour he had been making desperate efforts to run over the shadow of a leaf adhering to the head-light, and the discovery and reaction was too much for his already shattered nerves.—Burlington Hawkeys.

Perhaps the most familiar form of all is the dragon, that seems to have an esthe dragon, that seems to have an especially strong hold upon upon the Chinese as well as St. George. Some houses of worship, called popularly "joss houses," are known to true believers as temples of the "Dragon Ring." The dragon in some shape is seen about nearly ever; house of worship. To it the Charlesten hundrymen, if there were any, probably laid the earthquake in August, and the San Francisco devouts call to mind this terrible mouster whenever any convulsion occurs conster whenever any convulsion occurs here. The ordinary dragon would pass for the American sea serpent as depicted by the average landlord about September 1. Long and snake like, covered with scales, painted red or gilded, its caudal fin a set of streamers, the dorsal like a huge saw, it presents an uncanny appearance, yet is picturesque. The head is simply ap-palling: the mouth enormous—a red caverages always, with a plentiful annaly of ernous abyss, with a plentiful supply of teeth, from among which extends the tongue. Well made dragons generally have a mustache. Snakes of all kinds are considered as the earthly manifestations of the dragon and consequently occasionally are worshiped. - Sen Francisco

Up and down the pavements trip purchasers with baskets, who pick out their own corn, peaches, beans, salads and potatoes, and exchange chaff with the handsome farmer lads. Among them are large buyers—keepers of hotels and boarding houses, perchance—who have their goods carried to a central barrel which is guarded by a messen-er boy.

The sight is pretty and lively, quaint and enterprising. If it were in London or Paris the New Yorkers on a tour would get up early to see it, and write letters to the American newspapers about it. As it is right here in New York, at Gansevoort market, mobody ever thinks of paying it a visit, unless bent upon a little marketing racket. Artists who are always grumbling at their lack of subjects and taking tours abroad to find something to paint, would discover genre pletures ready to be transformed to canvas by highing the street ears to Gansevoort. y taking the street cars to Gansevoort. -New York Star.

It is not generally known how excellent an artist is her majesty the queen, who, in spite of political worries and domestic anxieties, has, in company with Princess Beatrice, devoted many hours this antumn to the pleasure of sketching. THE INSURANCE QUESTION.

field in behalf of lower insurance rates and a home company. As to the latter we find a strong impression abroad, in part among men who have had ob servation of similar experiments in limited constituencies elsewhere, that a local organization would be likely to find difficulty in obtaining a sufficiently Saturday, Even'g, Jan. S. wide distribution of risks, and in procuring safe securities for its investments. Still, it may be useful to have the question thoroughly canvassed in Amateur Dramatic Performance of J. Palgrave the press and on the street. It is still the opinion of this paper that a compromise of mutual advantage is feasible in time between the Board of Underwriters and the insuring public. If we can have cheap insurance without a local company, the capital required for the latter might probably find more active and useful employment in other time admit that the autumn drought has not proved so disastrous to the cane as expected.

. Insurance Again. To the Editor of the Herald: With many other interested ones I read with pleasure the letter of Mr. P. C. Jones in your paper, and am glad we have at last found the man who says, "Come." His scheme is a good one and it is to be hoped will take definite shape at once, and the city canvassed for subscribers to the shares of a "Home Mutual Fire Insurance Co." The remarks of Mr. Berger are all right from his standpoint as a monopolist, but there is another side to the question, which is the arbitrary rating of the agents of the foreign companies here, and giving as a reason (?) the amount of losses sustained by the companies at the last fire. Now it strikes me that some of them should go slow in such statements, when the kind and time of some of those risks were taken. The San Francisco rates cannot be taken as a basis here. Everything is against them, and in our favor, excepting in one very important matter to the companies, which is the Fire Marshal. In San Francisco he is appointed by the Board of Underwriters; and Bonnets, trimmed and untrimmed; Fancy his duty is to ascertain, if possible, the course of a fire, and report thereon. He is supposed to know (and does) as to the storage of explosives of all kinds, kerosene, etc. How is it here? By whom is the Fire Marshal appointed? And is he able to give the desired information as to the amount of kerosene in the city in shops and stores? Or the number of cases burned at the great fire? All this is relevant to the insurance companies, as well as to the insured. The law provides "that only five cases shall be stored in any one The annual meeting of the room," but a "room" of 20 feet square may be cut up by partitions to hold to or 15 cases. These are a few of the reasons why the monopolists aver that "a local company, will not pay." It will pay, because enough stock can be bers will wear white overalls, white tunics, secured in this city to pay the sub- forage caps and side arms. scribers to insure in their own interests, and Mr. Berger's reason (?) for not organizing a local company, 'hat "it would be liable to extinction at any time by a large fire"!!! would be

Mr. Russell Sage the Inventor of These Ingenious Speculative Devices-A Confidential Clerk Explains Them to an

Mr. Russell Sage was the pioneer who invented "puts," "calls," "spreads" and "straddles," He began dealing in them when he first came to Wall street in 1861, after his first came to Wall street in 1861, after his withdrawal from congress, and he has been dealing in them ever since; and the stock markets of the world have taken up this ingenious speculative device of Mr. Sago's, and stock privileges are just as well known on the continental bourses to day and in the London market as they are here, and they are largely dealt in. Perhaps not so largely as here, because the device is American and an outcome of American genius, but transcontinental speculators could not fail to see the advantages they offered and have perferce adopted ages they offered and have perferce adopted them. London declares that the nomenclature, so far as "apreads" and "straddles" are concerned, is not refined, and call them differ-ently, but what they deal in are American stock privileges just the same.

MADE AS CLEAR AS DAY.

"And what are 'puts, 'calls,' 'spreads' and 'straddles'!" asked the writer when he first went down on Wall street.

"Well," said John E. McCann, the confidential clerk of Russell Sage, of whom the question was asked, "Fill tell you if you if question was asked, "I'll tell you if you if you if you promise never to mention the poetical subject again. It requires pretty deft wording to make the thing clear, so it is not an exhibitanting subject to talk on. You hear a good deal about 'puts' and 'calls,' but I venture to say there are 50,000,000 persons in the United States who do not know what they are, nor what the meaning is of the word 'notyligenes'. Now a privilege is a contract by 'privileges.' Now a privilege is a contract by which the mator of it, Russell Sage, S. V. Walte, Jay Gould or Harvey Kennedy, en-gages to purchase from the holder in the one case, or to sell to the holder in the other case, a number of shares of some specified stock, at a certain price at any time within a cer-tain period at the option of the holder. Got that?

A "CALL" EXPLAINED.

"A 'call' is a privilege bought of the maker at a certain price, and the owner of it is priv-ileged to call for a certain amount of stock at a given price, within thirty, sixty or ninety days, four or six months. If a man holds a 'put' he has the right to deliver to the maker days, four or aix months. If a man holds a 'put' he has the right to deliver to the maker of the privilege a stock at a certain agreed on price within a certain number of days. Clears No. Well, let's try onex more.

"Suppose Western Union is selling at 70. A man wants a sixty day 'put' on it at 66, because he believes the stock is going down. He gives Mr. Sage, Mr. White, Mr. Kennedy or Mr. Gould 1 per cent. on the amount of stock he wants to deal in. A hundred shares is usual, and 1 per cent. is $100. He receives in return a slip of paper signed by either one or the other of these gentlemen. Then if Western Union goes below 65 within sixty days, he may buy it for whatever it is selling for below that price and 'put' it to the maker of the privilege at the price agreed on, 63, and receive a check for $0,000. The holder makes the difference. Ah, you understand. If telegraph does not go below 65 the holder is out his $100. The 'call' business operates exactly in the opposite way. A man buys the privilege of calling Western Union at 75 when it is selling at 70. If it sells above 75, you can caff on the maker of the privilege for 100 shares at 75, and the 100 shares are thus bought by the holder for $7,500, and he turns around and sells it at $0, if the stock is selling there, and pockets the difference."

"BPHEADS" AND "STRADDLES." "SPERADS" AND "STRADDLES."

"What about 'spreads' and 'straddlesf'"

"A 'straddle' is a 'put' and 'call' combined.

The holder of one may 'put' stock to the maker of the privilege or 'call' for it. 'Straddles' come high, because there is money in then whichever way the market may go. If the market does not go all, but stands still, why, the maker is in the money he has been paid for the privilege, usually about 3 per cents, or $300. A 'spread' is also a 'put' and and a 'call' combined, but there is this differa 'straddle' is made at the market. That is to say, the maker of the privilege takes the risk that the stock in question does not move to any extent from the price at which it is selling when the privilege is sold. In a 'spread' the maker has more leeway. If Western Union is selling at 70, to go back to the old illustration, the maker of the privilege sells a 'spread,' say at 67 and 80. If it goes below 67, the bolder can 'put' the stock and make the difference, and if it goes above 80, the holder can 'call' it at that price and reup the profits. But so long as the price of the stock keeps within those points the maker of the privilege is safe. To put it, in another way, the holder of a 'straddie' will make if the market for the stock he is dealing in moves at all. The holder of a 'spread' doesn't make anything until the market moves past certain limits. There is one thing more, the which it is selling when the privilege is sold. certain limits. There is one thing more, the maker of a privilege only receives the money for which he sells the privilege, while the holder may make thousands—or nothing.— New York Mail and Express.

Streets of the French Capital.

The streets of Paris are the best in the world, and its bonlevards lined with trees and having sidewalks 20 feet wide run for miles in differsidewalks 20 feet wide run for miles in different directions through the various parts of the city. The pavements of the sidewalks are generally smooth flagstones, and that of the roadway asphalt, wood or stone blocks evenly laid and free from holes. The streets are kept scrupulously clean. They are washed every morning with a hose, and swept so well that one might drop a handkerchief and pick it up without soiling it. The smoothness of the streets takes away the noise found in the chief thoroughfares of New York or London. The 15,000 cabs and numberless other vehicles glide sliently over the smooth reads, and an ordinary conversational tone can be pleasurably used upon the promenade.—Frank J. Carpen-ter in Cleveland Leader.

The Sale of Lincoln's Photographs.

The sale of President Lincoln's picture re-mains steady, and dealers are never without is. It is not a generally known fact that there is but one negative of President Lincoln in existence. This negative, which was taken by Brady, of Washington, is broken into two parts, the break having occured just above the shoulder and extending almost perpendicufar, inclining a little to the right, the longer way of the plate. Unless the picture is ex-amined very closely, however, it would not be guessed that it was printed from a broken plate.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Raisin Making.

At Santa Ana, Cal., raisin making is in full blast. Most people are laying down their own grapes, as there appear to be no buyers in the field for raisin grapes. BEATH.

O Death, the Consecrator!
Nothing to saretifies a name
As to be written—dead;
Nothing so wins a life from blame
So covers it from wrath and shame
As does the burial bed.

O Death, the Revelator!
Our deepest passions never move
Till thou bast bit them wake;
We know not half how much we love
Till all below and all above
Is shrouded for our sake.

O Death, the great Peacemaker!
If sumity have come between
There's naught like Death to beal it;
And if we love—O priceless pain,
O litter-sweet when love is valu!
There's naught like Death to seal it.

He Chased a Shadow

He Chased a Shadow.

As the engineer of engine 1,277, on the Wabash, pulled out of Given, en route for Ottumwa, one evening recently, he noticed what appeared to be a small animal hopipug along the track ahead of the pilot. Gradually he increased the speed of the locomotive, but the little quadruped seemed also to have "dropped another notch," and despite the tremendous gait of '77 easily retained its position. Disgusted beyond expression, the engineer began heaving chunks of coal at it, but all in vain. It seemed to bear a charmed life, and successfully baffled all endeavors of the engineer and fireman to check its wild career. For twenty-one miles the engineer had chased that delusive object, and thoroughly disgusted he gave up the race at Ottumwa, and he gave up the race at Ottumwa, and stopped. The object stopped also. With his pick in hand the engineer made a sneak on the animal, harmless, but possessed of such anomalous migratory possessed of such anomalous migratory powers. With quick precision he brought the pick down full on the animal's back, but a "sickening thud" was the only sound he heard, and with a wild laugh he arose, thenceforth to be a raving maniac. For a full hour he had been making desperate efforts to run over the shadow of a leaf adhering to the headlight, and the discovery and reaction was too much for his aiready shattered nerves.—Burlington Hawkeye.

The Dragon in Chinese Joss Houses The Dragon in Chinese Joss Houses.

Perhaps the most familiar form of all is the dragon, that seems to have an especially strong hold upon upon the Chinese as well as St. George. Some houses," are known to true believers as temples of the "Dragon King." The dragon in some shape is seen about nearly ever; house of worship. To it the Charlesten laundrymen, if there were any, probably laid the carthquake in August, and the San Francisco devouts call to mind this terrible monster whenever any convulsion occurs conster whenever any convulsion occurs monster whenever any convulsion occurs here. The ordinary dragon would pass for the American sea serpent as depicted by the average landlord about September 1. Long and snake like, covered with scales, painted red or gilded, its caudal fin a set of streamers, the dorsal like a huge saw, it presents an uncanny appearance, yet is picturesque. The head is simply appalling: the mouth enormous—a red cavernous abyse, with a plentiful supply of teeth, from among which extends the tongue. We'll made dragons generally inve a mustache. Snakes of all kinds are considered as the earthly manifestations of the dragon and consequently occasionally are worshiped.—Sen Francisco Call.

Guesevoort Market, New York.

An open square, divided by numerous paved walks; on one side the river and its moving panorama as a background; on the other three sides large stores, where all sorts of provisions can be procured. Along the pavements in the square long lines of country wagons, taden with fresh fruits and vegetables, which are sold in retail quantities at wholesale prices. Up and down the pavements trip purchasers with baskets, who pick out their own corn, peaches, beans, salads and potatoes, and exchange chaff with the handsome farmer lads. Among them are large buyers—keepers of hotels and boarding houses, perchance—who have their goods carried to a central barrel which is guarded by a messenter that the salar country is a supersection. Gansevoort Market, New York. rat parret which is guarded by a mes

The sight is pretty and lively quaint and enterprising. If it were in London or Paris the New Yorkers on a tour would get up early to see it, and write letters to get up early to see it, and write letters to the American newspapers about it. As it is right here in New York, at Ganse-voort market, nobody ever thinks of paying it a visit, unless bent upon a little parketing racket. Artists who are al-ways grumbling at their lack of subjects and taking tours sbroad to find some-thing to paint, would discover genre pict-ures ready to be transformed to canvas by taking the street cars to Gansevoort. —New York Star. -New York Star.

The Princess Wilhelmine, heir to the throne of Holland, has lately celebrated her sixth birthday anniversary. On that occasion the queen invited to the royal palace all children born on the same day as the princess, and treated them to a banquet and presents of toys. A surprising number responded to the call, and though the queen velcomed themell, she was heard to remark that the list of August, 1880, must have been the createst day for births on record.—For-right Letter.

The Queen as an Artist.
It is not generally known how excelent an artist is her majesty the queen, lent an artist is her majesty the queen, who, in spite of political worries and domestic anxieties, has, in company with Princess Beatrice, devoted many hours this autumn to the pleasure of sketching. Some of the princess' sketches, I hear, are destined when finished for exhibition next season. It is a pity her majesty cannot be prevailed upon to give the public a chance of also admiring her really elever productions.—London World.

London's Tricycle Cab.

A tricycle cab has been licensed by the London authorities and is picking up what patronage it can with a view to general introduction. Women like it because they can get in and out without solling their dresses on the muddy wheels, and there is easy communication with the driver. It is still enough of a novelty to be generally stared at. - Boston Trans
