A Wife's Influence

Some men would never be able to go through at all if it were not for the encouragement given them by their faithful wives. A notable instance of how much a man can accomplish when he is sustained and cheered up by his wife occurred not long since in a German village. He was a peasant, the strongest man physically in the neighborhood, and he was very proud of it. A wealthy neighbor had just received a load of wood which was drawn by two strong horses. Our modern Sampson boasted that he, by himself, would pull the load without turning a hair. The owner of the load replied that if the peasant could draw the load of wood to his house he would call it his own.

The peasant accepted the nomination, lashed himself to the wagon, and endeavored to trot off with it, but it would not go. The wagon displayed great gentleness, and refused to move. It was so heavily laden that it refused to go off. He tugged, and pulled, and grunted, but all in vain. His efforts had no more effect on the wagon than a Republican speech might have on a Louisiana audience. He was about to withdraw from the contest, when his wife put in an appearance. She was informed of the nature of the proceeding, and saw right off how she could save money. She immediately seized the whip, and proceeded to encourage her husband with it. "Get up there, you lazy brute," she remarked, striking him a clip that made him jump, and removed a portion of his shirt and some buttons. This cheered up the husband, who made the greatest effort of his life, and started off with the loaded wagon. His devoted wife walking by his side, and helping him from time to time, the usual quantities suggested being one quart of molasses a day for a stone, and two quarts for a fat load. This should be mixed with one chaff, cake, mangel, &c., and turned over a few times, leaving it for a few hours to allow the sugar to be thoroughly absorbed, and in addition a slight degree of fermentation to be set up. If dry sugar is preferred it can be sprinkled in small quantities over the prepared food. In some cases it has even been used by farmers when stacking newly cut hay. The following receipt appeared some years back in the Sugar Case: 50 lb. of hay, 50 lb. of straw, 14 lb. of Indian meal, 14 lb. of bran, 14 lb. of linseed cake, and 7 lb. of castor sugar. It is evident, however, that these quantities are open to improvement, and it must be noted whether the animal thrives on the mixture or not. At any rate, the fact that sugar, whether wet or dry, can be used for feeding purposes has been fully proved, and it is certain that if the local grocers who are in direct communication with the farmers were to bring the matter more frequently before them, a large and profitable trade would ensue.

Sugar for Cattle-Feeding

Correspondent writes in the following manner on a subject of current interest:—An extraordinary depression in the price of sugar has again brought to the front the desirability of its use for cattle-feeding. In this country, the practice of giving animals sugar or molasses with their food was commenced after the abolition of the sugar duties in 1874, and has since become common enough. At the same time, the addition of sugar to cattle food has only been to a small extent, and is capable of vast development, now that prices are so wonderfully low, for it has been calculated that the various domestic animals in the country could readily consume quite as much sugar as its human inhabitants. In tropical countries animals are extensively fed either on the sugar cane, the cane tops, or various saccharine matters produced during the manufacture, and they thrive wonderfully upon it. In Brazil, sugar is even given to fowls. On the Continent cattle are fed to an immense extent on the beet pulp, left after it has been pressed in the sugar factories. In this country most of the milky of best in feeding is due to the four or five per cent. of sugar it contains. The liking of horses for sugar is familiar to everyone, and it might form an excellent addition to the ordinary diet. Sugar or molasses will induce cattle to eat all sorts of matter, which they would otherwise reject, such as in-ferment hay, or cut straw mixed with it. In a large dairy farm near London, sugar has been found to effect an actual economy by inducing the cows to thoroughly chew out every particle of food from the manger, instead of leaving a good deal, as they ordinarily do. It has been used by another farmer to improve the yield of the milk and to increase its percentage of cream. The flesh of pigs parted on sugar has been proved to be actually fine. In the Midlands, where comparatively few roots are grown, sheep have also been very successfully fed with molasses, diluted down with water.

Now that sugar can be bought for this purpose at a little over 10s. per lb. in London, and refuse molasses at just over 1d. per lb., there is no doubt an opening for a great extension in its use for feeding stock of all sorts. As a relish alone, sugar would fill an important place, while its known to be a most nutritious and fattening substance. This year, with a light hay and root crop, affords just the opportunity for its introduction. The farmers generally are, no doubt, as a rule, quite unaware of the wonderfully low prices now prevalent for sugars, which though sold for table use, such as Jag gery or low West Indian sets, get on this year over 90 per cent. of sugar than last year. Low sugars have also the advantage for this purpose, of not being attractive to flies, bees and others, where a more palatable sweetener might tempt too much. A little molasses oil, however, which is a wholesome addition for cattle, has been found an effective antidote to the craving of the average farmer's dog after the molasses that is intended for his benefit. West India molasses of course varies in its constitution, but probably contains over 10 per cent. of cane and 20 per cent. of grape sugar—say 60 per cent. of sucrose. It is true for the farmer's purpose worth about two-thirds the price of sugar. It is also convenient in use, as it does not require to be dissolved before mixing with roots, chaff, hay, &c. At the same time sugar is very readily assimilated, and in some respects more kindly than molasses, and the difference in price is probably less, and certainly not more, than the difference in intrinsic value. All that sugar requires would be a little more water than the molasses does, and possibly the smaller proportion of salt in the sugar would render it a better food for animals. Warm water mixes better than cold with either sugar or molasses.

Various receipts have been given by well known agriculturists and stock raisers along by an occasional journal, in the style of a well directed kick when he becomes discouraged.

It is needless to add that, thanks to the gentle ministrations of the wife, the family was provided with cheap firewood, at the comparatively trifling cost of a new whip and a fifteen-cent bottle of ammonia. The man who lost the wood substance, however, a very exalted opinion of the influence of the woman. — Frederic

Satisfying Husbands

We read so much about the obligations laid upon the wife to be a perpetual sunbeam in the home, that a word to her husbands on this topic may not be amiss.

A cheerful atmosphere is important to happy home life. It is hard for children to be good when they are exposed to an incessant hail-storm of fault-finding from their parents. It is very difficult for a wife to maintain a calm and charmingly sweet demeanor when her husband is critical or scolding, and takes all her tender efforts with indifferent appreciation.

I know full well the air of polite amusement or amiable incredulity with which men receive the statement of a woman's opinion that in the home partnership, the wife, and not the husband, pulls the laboring oar. Still, it is true, that let a man's business be ever so absorbing, ever so wearisome, ever so laborious, the mere fact that he goes to it in the morning and returns from it at night, sets him above his wife in ease and comfort. Even the slavery of routine has its break. He gets a breath of the world outside, he has change of scene daily; he sees people and hears their talk; and his home is distinct by his signs and shelter.

Let a wife and mother love her home and children with the most absolute, unswerving devotion, and serve them with the most selfless fidelity, there are, nevertheless, times when she is very weary.

She knows better than any one else the steps and the stitches, the same things done over and over, and the pettiness of the trials that come to the nursery and kitchen. They are so insignificant that she is ashamed to talk about them, and I fear she sometimes forgets to tell her. So, bearing her cross all alone, its weight becomes crushing. A smiling husband makes a merry, beautiful home, worth having, worth working in and for. If the man is leazy, slothy, considerate and sympathetic, his wife sings in her heart over packings and mending basket, and counts the hours till he returns at night, and renews her youth in the security she feels of his appreciation and admiration.

You may think it weak or childish, if you please, but it is the admired wife—the wife who bears words of praise, and who receives smiles of commendation, who is capable, discreet and executive. I have seen a timid, weak, self-distrustful little body fairly bloom into strong, self-reliant womanhood under the tonic and the cordial companionship of a husband who really went out of his way to find occasion for showing her how fully he trusted her judgment, and how tenderly he deferred to her opinion.

In home there should be no jar, no striving for place, no insisting on prerogatives, or division of interest. The husband and wife are each the complement of the other. And it is as much his duty to be cheerful as it is hers to be patient—his right to bring joy into the door, as it is hers to sweep and garnish the pleasant interior. A family where the daily walk of the father makes life a festival, is filled with heavenly benediction.—The Leader.

Origin of Christmas.

Christmas looks out at us from the dim shadow of the graves of the Druids who knew not Christ, and it is dear to those who now recognize the name of Christian.

The Christian and anti-Christian feeling blend in the happy season, and the Christian observance brings at every point with the pagan rites.

Our modern Christmas is made up of a strange medley of Christian and Pagan rites. After the conversion of Britain to Christianity, the teachers could not entirely free the converts from their cherished superstitions.

So came the mistletoe, regarded with the utmost veneration in the religion of the Druids, who used forth with yew, and rejecting to gather the mystic bough.

In the Roman Church, masses were held at midnight, at daybreak, and at a later hour. A superstition prevailed that at this time the powers of darkness could exert no evil influence.

Some say that ever since that season comes, when our Saviour's birth is celebrated, the last of December sleeps all night long.

An ancient custom is the singing of carols. In the early ages of the Church they were sung by the inmates on Christmas Day, but later by the children going about on Christmas morning.

When Christ was born of Mary Ann, in Bethlehem, in that fair morn, Angels sang there with mirth and glad, In stables plain.

Our own Christmas tree and Santa Claus have been handed down from the middle ages. They came to us from Germany, where Christmas has at various times especially a joyful season for the children.

lan past, and as—distant a little way from the city—all discordant sounds are hushed, and there rises on the evening air only the melody of the bells, so over the busy masses of the present, and the fading traditions of the past, floats sweet and clear the angel's song—whose with steady radiance the star that arose in the east, a star whose light shall know no setting.

The Duke of Monmouth.—The Emperor William is the oldest monarch in Europe, Queen Victoria is sixty-five, King Christian of Denmark is sixty-six, and his wife, the Queen, is a year older.

Hawaiian Gazette.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1883.

From the columns we learn that the extension for seven years of the Hawaiian Reciprocity Treaty has been signed by the Secretary of State.

An excellent petition from the San Francisco merchants was telegraphed to Senator Miller, which lays out the whole question in a very clear manner and bears the signature of the Chamber of Commerce.

Last Sunday evening a little tribe of children asked to have the Christmas hymns played to them.

Yes, Christmas day of 1884 will be with us to-morrow. Just as the New Year is the time for new resolutions, so Christmas is the time for looking back upon a year's friendship and love.

This evening and to-morrow's morn will see many a man or woman in this city bearing in mind the present surroundings and going back into the past.

But we must look to the brighter side too. Fair haired Miss is looking forward to her day.

Such thoughts, and many more come on us all at the Christmas season; our own foibles, our weaknesses, our late and disliking crowd on us.

And so amidst an echo of what we believe to be the holiest and best epoch there, we wish to all A VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS!

SHOULD the number of questions that there are to be considered by the Board of Health, it is extraordinary that no meeting of the Board has been called.

gold can no more save the country from the final necessity of obtaining the gold by exporting silver, than the law of gravitation will dispense in Honolulu with the law of gravitation change the specific gravity of bodies.

If that agreement (to take certificates) held the Cabinet into a sense of security in relying upon silver, and the non-presentation of the certificates, it would be better to have the law take its course.

But a government cannot be so treated. It has no right to be so treated, except the good faith of its officials, and their unswerving obedience to the law of the land.

We appreciate the responsibility of the Cabinet in declaring that the money of the silver is the value they will accept.

To give up such agreement now would be to give up the money of the silver, and to make such agreements with the Treasury to leave it there, and to keep their certificates, that is well enough.

But such an arrangement would be to give up the money of the silver, and to make such agreements with the Treasury to leave it there, and to keep their certificates, that is well enough.
