TRAVELER, HO!

By JEANNIE BOWMAN

Anita-McClymer swept through the lobby of the Pink Hotel, where the bellman was fussing with a knot in the bow of the hotel's sign. "Where's the bus from Honolulu, and how much is it?"

"But Miss Anita," the bellman appealed, "you can't catch the bus from here. It leaves from—"

"But I've got tickets," Anita-McClymer interrupted, "isn't this the right place?"

"Yes, ma'am," the bellman admitted, "but the bus leaves from the main entrance on the other side of the street."

"Oh, bother," Anita-McClymer exclaimed, "it's a long way down there."

"Not really," the bellman assured her, "it's about three blocks."

"Three blocks?" Anita-McClymer gasped, "that's a long way for a girl like me."

"But it's only three blocks," the bellman explained, "and it's a nice part of town."

"I don't care," Anita-McClymer declared, "I'm not going."

"But Miss Anita," the bellman persisted, "you can't miss the bus."

"I'm not going," Anita-McClymer insisted, "I'm not going."
