Hui o mad at Neil

Contrary to Rep. Neil Abercrombie's claim (Letters, 10/12), the socalled Threatened and Endangered Species Recovery Act (a.k.a. "Extinction Bill") would weaken vital protection for the honu, silversword, nēnē, monk seals and Hawai'i's more than 300 other endangered and threatened species. The bill would legalize extortion by requiring taxpayers to pay developers not to violate the ban on killing endangered species without a permit. It would automatically approve projects-no matter how destructive-if the government lacks the resources to respond in time. It would strip protections against harmful pesticides.

Particularly dangerous is the Extinction Bill's proposal to eliminate "critical habitat," which identifies the places endangered and threatened species need to survive. Studies confirm that species with designated critical habitat are twice as likely to be increasing in number.

The Extinction Bill would discard the critical habitat designations already in place, protecting Hawai'i's imperiled species, and replace them with vague, purely voluntary recovery plans put together by committees stacked with industry shills and others hostile to species protection. As former Fish and Wildlife Service director Jamie Rappaport Clark stressed in testimony against the Extinction Bill, its "elimination of critical habitat without providing an improved way of protecting habitat essential to species recovery is a significant step backward." Far from supporting species recovery, as Rep. Abercrombie misleadingly suggested in his letter, Clark concluded it "would deal a tremendous setback to the recovery of threatened and endangered species."

Rep. Abercrombie's opposition to critical habitat is based on the fiction—popularized by anti-environmental extremists—that designation deprives landowners of use of their property. In fact, critical habitat doesn't affect private land at all, as long as the federal government isn't involved. If landowners decide to seek federal subsidies, permits, or other assistance, they simply need to ensure their project will not destroy habitat endangered species need. If landowners don't like that requirement, they don't have to seek federal help. The choice is theirs.

Hawai'i's congressional delegation should be fighting for strong habitat protection, enforceable recovery plans and increased funding to promote on-the-ground conservation efforts, not kowtowing to property-rights zealots who have no aloha for Hawai'i's native plants and animals. We applaud Rep. Ed Case for voting against the Extinction Bill, and, now that the battle over the future of Hawai'i's natural heritage has shifted to the Senate, urge Sens. Akaka and Inouye similarly to stand up for the Endangered Species Act.

"Mercury Rising?" (10/5) completely ignores the good news in a recent report by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention entitled "Blood Mercury Levels in Young Children and Childbearing-Aged Women—United States, 1999-2002." The CDC confirmed that the blood mercury levels in young children and women of childbearing age are below levels of concern.

Council for Hawaii

Over the past few years, advoca-ry emissions are poisoning babies. As alarming as this may be, it cannot be supported by scientific fact. The statement by Moira Chapin, U.S. PIRG's Hawai'i field organizer, that "any amount of mercury is a public health threat" is simply false. It is true that exposure to mercury in high levels can cause neurologic and kidney disorders in humans, but the dose makes the poison. The new CDC report didn't find a single case—out of more than 1,500 babies and 3,600 women—where mercury levels were anywhere close to being harmful. Science may be boring, but it represents the truth-women aren't exposed to levels of methylmercury that would place newborn children at risk. That's not only the conclusion of the new CDC report; it's also the conclusion of two decade-long studies that found no scientific evidence that low-level mercury exposure in fish put babies at risk. The CDC cannot point to a single case of mercury poisoning from the consumption of fish in the U.S., but does report the deaths of 361,047 women last year from heart disease. The EPA and the FDA agree that fish are an important part of diet and can significantly lower one's risk of heart disease.

Our focus should be less on what contaminants are circulating through our environment and more on whether they are causing us harm. In the meantime, the need for burdensome and costly regulations to reduce a yet uncertain risk to public health is neither necessary nor prudent.

Buried history

planned cleanup at Mānoa Cemetery is causing concern among advocates and families of those interred there, many of whom are native Hawaiians. Some say the project, scheduled for Oct. 22, has been planned without the families' input and may put the 'iwi kūpuna (ancestral remains) at risk. The cemetery, founded by Queen Ka'ahumanu in 1823, is of added cultural importance because the Queen designated the site for "Christian burial," making it a point of transition between Hawaiian burial traditions and Christian ones.

The cemetery lies on the same East Mānoa Road site that is home to Manoa Valley Theatre and is the property of Kawaiaha'o Church, which leases the land to MVT. Kim Ku'ulei Birnie, a neighborhood resident who does not have kūpuna buried on the site, says MVT has not done enough to identify and contact descendant families of the roughly 170 people buried there.

"Are there plants and rocks that are markers, that should be left in place? Are there family protocols that should be followed before entering their sacred burial spaces?" asks Birnie. She recalls an MVT representative telling the attendees of an Oct. 4 community meeting that the theater simply didn't know who the families might be. "Gosh, three families revealed themselves that night. Imagine how many more [would] come forth if you put the word out."

As a result of that meeting, Kawaiaha'o has taken the initiative and made headway in the effort to identify the families. The situation is complicated by a lack of institutional knowledge at MVT and Kawaiaha'o about the history of the cemetery-of the 169 known burials on the site, only 37 headstones remain. Lani Lapilio of the community outreach and cultural resource management firm Ku'iwalu, which is working with the church to identify families, says a handful of 'ohana are the only surviving source of knowledge. "My understanding is that a fire at the church destroyed their records of who was buried at Manoa Cemetery and when," Lapilio says. "That's why it's important that we get the word out and try to find those families who may have kūpuna there."

Lapilio is in contact with a core group of families who are active at the cemetery and will be meeting with representatives of those 'ohana and MVT officials Oct. 19. "[The families] are supportive of the cleanup, but they're also concerned that it be done appropriately and in a way that is respectful." She is also hopeful that families who miss the meeting or even the cleanup-particularly a Wai'anae 'ohana with many kūpuna at the cemetery—will come forward to share what they know of the 'iwi. "We need to keep that knowledge alive," Lapilio says. "I know, we all have our priorities, but what happens when 25 years pass, and that history is gone?"

As Honolulu Weekly went to press, word emerged that significant construction has already taken place at the cemetery. Following a concrete pour over the weekend, the existing sidewalk leading from East Mānoa Road to the theater proper has been expanded. Birnie says that given the nature of the site, expanding the sidewalk without affecting gravesites would be "impossible." She notes that at the October meeting, a woman shared that when the original sidewalk was laid in the 1970s, her grandmother's headstone was moved without the family's permission, leaving her buried grandmother beneath the sidewalk until the problem was remedied.

Kawaiaha'o officials could not be reached for comment, and it was unclear whether their permission had been obtained. Lapilio says neither she nor the families were consulted before the construction took place. -Ragnar Carlson

Interested families and others may contact Lani Lapilio at Ku'iwalu, 539-3589. The Mānoa Cemetery cleanup is scheduled for Sat, 10/22, 8AM-4PM, Manoa Valley Theatre, 2833 East Mānoa Rd.

Biodiesel big-time

IF THEY WERE WORRIED ABOUT KEEPING UP with explosive growth before, Pacific Biodiesel is really in trouble now. The Mauibased company, best known for bringing planet-friendly biodiesel to drivers there and on O'ahu, has been awarded the 2005 BlueSky. Award. The honor is presented jointly by the United Nations and a sustainable-development institute in Shenzhen, China. Pacific Biodiesel is one of eight winners selected from a pool of 127 applicants by a panel devoid of American judges.

. A crew of PB's managers and scientists made the trip to Shenzhen for the 2005 China High Tech Fair, where they pitched their system to the expert panel. along with 19 other finalists. "All the experts were very receptive to our process," says communications director Kelly King (pictured with husband and company president Bob King), who provided the judges with an overview of the technology. PB's process involves recycling cooking oil from restaurants and other large consumers and converting the oil to a clean form of diesel fuel. King figures the competition's locale probably didn't hurt. "Most of them could see the application...to China as well as to their own countries."

Apparently, the award was more than just a pat on the back. . King says a panelist from Germany pressed the company to enter his country's market. "Even though Germany had been producing biodiesel [for] years before we started," she explains, "their primary...stock is rapeseed oil, so the idea of utilizing a waste-oil feedstock seems new to them." Company officials were also approached by scores of Chinese businesses. "There is definitely a market and a need for this technology there," King says. China is one of the most polluted countries on Earth and is rapidly expanding its industrial infrastructure.

The trip to China was prompted largely by the company's need to gauge the Asian market for their fuels. Pacific Biodiesel is already struggling to keep up with runaway demand here—they've limited retail sales to a club-type system on Maui and may do the same for O'ahu-and on the U.S. mainland. Still, King says, the prospects are "great. Our experience in China will certainly stir a discussion about the value of funding additional resources to address interest abroad.'

For now, the PB folks are basking in the afterglow. "[The award] is an honor and a huge satisfaction." Kelly says, "which we owe to years of hard work...and the support of the community.'

Fistful of hollers

The news isn't all bad—some things are worth shouting about

Chef Mavro has been named Honolulu's "Best Restaurant for Business" by Gourmet Magazine. Other local eateries to receive shout-outs include Nico's Pier 39 Restaurant, 12th Ave. Grill, town and La Mer.

The University of Hawai'i's College of Tropical Agriculture and Human Resources (breathe) recently launched a new website devoted to organic farming (www.ctahr.hawaii.edu/organic). Good news for the organic community, which has accused CTAHR for pursuing biotech and chemical dollars at the expense of traditional farming.

'Don't say we don't give equal time-enrollment at Hawai'i Pacific University hit an all-time high this fall. The school is celebrating its 40th anniversary this year and, with robust programs in nursing and business and a new focus on teacher training, seems to be hitting its stride—the university is now home to students from every U.S. state.

And some things still suck:

KHON and anchor Joe Moore took their gas-cap jihad to new heights (lows?) last week. On Oct. 16, Channel 2 sent a crew to a gas station in Kāhala, home to some of the highest prices on the island, and sure enough, found some folks eager to complain about high gas prices. Something was said about "volatility." Something was said about "expensive." Cut back to Joe, Joe shakes head. This on the day forecasters announced a 40-cent drop in wholesale prices. The Weekly phoned to ask station managers if (or why) Channel 2 has taken an editorial position against the cap, but our calls went unreturned.

INTERVIEW BY LESA GRIFFITH

Rep. Michael Kahikina, D-44th (Nānākuli, Honokai Hale), Hawai'i's first state representative to have been born and raised on Hawaiian Homelands, wants to make sure everybody—from Wai'anae's homeless to the working poor—has a home. In May, the Legislature passed the Omnibus Housing Bill, which gives incentives to developers to build affordable housing and creates the Affordable Housing Task Force. Kahikina, the task force's co-chair is working full bore to get projects off the ground that take advantage of the bill. And this legislative session he promises to introduce a rent cap. Anyone who hasn't been able to find an affordable rental, it's up to you to be vocal and support the bill when it comes up next spring. Don't say we didn't warn you. The task force just held a public hearing on Oct. 12, the first of many to come this fall.

What is the task force's ultimate goal?

To build more homes, to get more people off the beaches. That's my ultimate goal. You know the answer, give it to me, I'm here, man. I'm open, wide open, transparent. We're tired of only studying. We want real things happening. Like the Uluwehi housing project in Wai'anae—it was left fallow 14 years, while we had people homeless right down the beach. We were thinking of building a camp, when we could have renovated [Uluwehi] and put people in it—we wanted to build peoples' lives build self esteem, have coordinated agencies, like Habitat, come and teach people carpentry, but we were unsuccessful. They tore it down, but we went after the request for proposals (RFP) and we just heard last week we got it. [Ed-Hawaiian Coalition of Christian Churches was awarded the RFP to design, build and operate a gated community of 72 one-and two-bedroom units along with offices, meeting rooms, 40 single dormitory beds, and an administration building. The community would include case managers, medical care, a substance-abuse program and day care.]

The new idea is integrated living, building a village, like [the proposed Nānākuli Village Center] on Hawaiian Homelands. It's empowering people to come and dream and build their community. It's about building a quality of life, places where you can say that's a community center, we can talk, fight, heal and mend. Areas where we can focus our attention on growing our children, commercial sites that help put money back into the community.

What will the Affordable Housing Task

We're trying to put together opportunities that can happen, that can actually get these projects built. Developers have said, "We got to make some money because we're building for the very poor and we're going to have to subsidize them." Prior to this, in order for [developers] to get tax credits, etc., to fast-track...the permitting process, they had to build all affordable [housing]. They said "if you can give us half of it as commercial [housing], that could pay for the poor."

Then they pointed out the ceiling we went up to. In some cases we asked that affordable housing be built for those at 80 percent or 100 percent of the median income. At 80 and below, you're talking about the very, very poor. When you calculate that [they would pay] 30 percent of their income on rent, you'll be lucky if [that would] even taking care of the note on the mortgage. [Developers] need that other income. But if we go up to 140 percent, those are the working class and their 30 percent does pan out. A family of four at 140 percent on O'ahu would be earning something like $92,000 a year. You're talking about that working class that's not poor enough to get into the housing project and not making enough to buy a $500,000 house.

So we said, "OK in this bill we'll [let you build] 50 percent market-rate housing so you can make your money. [With] the other 50 percent, do affordable—20 percent of that for the very poor, [the rest] can go up to 140 percent [of median income]. I would love to have it all affordable, that's what we had on the books prior to that, but nobody would build it. They said yes, and that's what we did.

Are you looking at new legislation? Why is there no rent control in Honolulu?

I've introduced rent-control bills, and there hasn't been the will. They have the will to control gas caps, though. That's a start. As with gas, when [the price] gets out of control [to the point] where consumers are gouged, I think government has a responsibility to step in. That's the Democrat part of me speaking.

You say there's no political will, but it's the will on the part of the people too, right? Is rent control or stabilization a possibility? Everything is wide open right now. In legisla-ferent story. I can promise you this: I will be introducing a rent cap. If I get more people pounding doors, it may be heard and we may have a different outcome. That's how democracy works.

The task force recently took a tour of low-income housing developments on O'ahu.

What were your impressions? We saw state and federal housing, private development -some using our tax credit, some not. I wasn't about to go there and shoot down every project and say this is all substandard and we should tear it down-that's foolish. And we have to consider what we can afford to build for someone who has nothing. I'd like to build a mansion, but quite honestly I felt what I saw was very livable.

What really struck me is you have federal laws that do not encourage people to get involved in their village to repair their village. For instance, in Kūhīo Park Terrace you got to do X amount of community service—and [the residents] got a rule that says they can't do it in their own complex. That's ridiculous. Wouldn't you want them to put their love back in their community? Those are the kinds of laws that, to me, are contrary to the whole doctrine of our constitution. If it's in our power to change [that rule], I want to change it.

urban planners and other development experts?

I want to sit down with all those experts, county guys, bankers. When I get them in the room, the job is to take down your facade and look at what's out there, and how [to] make this thing happen.

Is the city a help or obstacle to affordable housing?

In the purview of housing, I'm saying this to every council member, I do not want to step on people's toes. I respect the county's authority. But in this case, because housing is a crisis and we have laws on the books that would fast track it, either the counties make it happen or this chairman will step on their toes to build affordable housing.

How bad is homelessness in Wai'anae?

I not going close my eyes. You know when it rains, we go out there, we grab them and I look for the kids with their purple lip and their chattering. Me and my son, we feeding them corn chowder, cracker and bread. Last time my son, he was just elated. He took things for granted, like his own pillow. We go down to the beach and search for the kids. They got some powerful parents, man. They're not all drug addicts, some are just in a situation. This one couple told us "take our kids." They were so grateful that we came for their kids.

hese days, it's hard to find a time when there's not a film festival playing in town. Every major city has them, so why not Honolulu? And we're not complaining.

Tomorrow, this year's Hawaii International Film Festival kicks off for the 25th year. The event has grown from a seven-film mini fest by the University of Hawai'i's East-West Center to a cinema extravaganza of more than 200 films from around the world—a global contender with a sterling reputation that draws more than 1,400 film submissions annually.

The growth can, naturally, be attributed to hard-working festival staff members who spend all year poring over submission tapes from aspiring filmmakers from Uruguay or Indonesia or Turkey; then narrowing them down and, finally—with the help of an army of volunteer screening committees—picking the choice few that will make festival goers come back next year.

Films, no matter how spectacular, need an audience to view them or they're like the tree that falls in the forest with no one to hear it. And now more than ever, it seems Honolulu's audience is ready to bear witness to film greatness. HIFF's growth is the obvious example, but everywhere you look, it's as if film—as opposed to the Hollywood blockbuster—is finally beginning to take hold of the crowd. A full schedule

The annual Cinema Paradise Independent Film Festival, now in its fifth year, is a huge hit, and though it's sort of a scenester's fest, its success can only mean one of two things: the whole city is made up of scenesters (obviously untrue) or this city is developing a taste for film.

The Honolulu Academy of Arts' Doris Duke Theatre just

Sergio Goes: The filmmaker is also a film promoter—he co-founded the Cinema Paradise Indpendent Film Festival wrapped up its first Global Lens Film Festival, a national touring event of 10 films from the developing world, out of New York's Global Film Initiative. The festival, which screens independent films from countries like Mali and Uruguay, makes stops at art institutes nationwide.

The Academy actually hosts a number of film festivals throughout the year, all of which are well received by audiences, says the academy's film curator, Konrad Ng. Over the past year, he has seen attendance at his theater soar, a trend that he says is proof that Honoluluans are ready to embrace a homegrown film culture.

"I think the scene is quite good right now. With the Academy for Creative Media, there's a healthy, organic component to the film scene," says Ng, who also teaches auteur theory at ACM. "There are people here who are excited about making film and that contributes to it. There are a whole lot of festivals all year round. Every two months there's something to watch." Like September's little Italian Film Festival that brought in director Marco Ponti and his new film Round Trip. Or Leeward Community College's recent four-movie Film Noir Fest, which screened 1954's Hell's Half Acre, shot entirely on location in Honolulu. Or the University of Hawai'i's Vietnamese film festival rolling at the Doris Duke Theatre next month. Or...the list goes on.

And while those at the forefront of the film scene disagree on the prognosis of the future of film (some say that a bright future is just around the corner, some think it's a long ways off), they all agree that things can only get better and that the presence of an accredited film school is the foundation for a thriving film scene.

"It's not L.A. or New York, but with HIFF, the Academy of Arts and all the other festivals rising in town, there's much more of a film culture being established," says Anderson Le, the film curator for HIFF. "It's also very important that there's a base from which to nurture a film culture, like a film school—and we finally we have one at ACM. Film literature is becoming much more prevalent in the community. The film school is going in the right direction. I think it can really spearhead the effort to make Honolulu an international cinema port, a resource, a place where there's a talent base."

Keep it local

It's a good thing this city is starting to grow its own talent because the allure of Hawai'i as a film location may be waning. While the natural beauty of the islands is the perfect backdrop for films and television shows, producers also take into account the financial benefits of filming here, and according to the State Film Office, the benefits aren't always worth it. Hawai'i's current refundable tax credit for media productions is 4 percent—not enough to draw producers, unless, of course, the production is Lost, which is owned by wealthy ABC. And even the popular television show's future isn't entirely secure. Before the start of the second season, producers were considering moving the series to California, which is easier on production pockets.

Mynette Louie, the film industry coordinator for the film office, says it's difficult to market Hawai'i to the film industry when the incentives are so few-and when the competition is so tough. For example, New Mexico has a 20 percent tax credit and its film office just signed seven feature films. The state is having to import workers to keep up with the load—a scenario that might do Hawai'i's economy good and that, for now, is just an industry dream. During the last legislative session, the film office launched a campaign to introduce two bills that would increase the tax credit. The bills failed—a major setback for the industry that had hoped that being the production home for a popular television series, a few hit films (Jurassic Park, 50 First Dates), a few not-so-hit films (The Big Bounce) and Cheryl

And with that vision, the film office is on the same page as everyone else. The agents for local independent film, like Sergio

Goes, the conduits for the propagation of national and international film in Hawai'i, like the Academy of Arts, and the people in between, like the HIFF crew, are all working toward a common goal: to nurture Hawai'i's local film scene. Not that the Hollywood types aren't welcome—the film office will still work on marketing the islands. But now, thanks to the organic nature of the local scene, it can recognize Honolulu as a future film hub and work toward that end.

Festival must-see

HIFF offers audiences a rare opportunity to see Katharine Hepburn's "lost" last film—the critically acclaimed—but virtually unseen—writer's cut of The Ultimate Solution of Grace Quigley.

Writer-director A. Martin Zweiback flung a 35-page treatment over the garden gate of the house where Hepburn was recovering from hip surgery. The star liked it well enough to write a check for Zweiback to write the script for The Ultimate Solution of Grace Quigley.

Over the next 12 years, the film would emerge in two versions: the panned theatrical release, titled simply Grace Quigley, overseen by the film's director, Anthony Harvey (who worked with Hepburn on The Lion in Winter); and the Writer's Cut. Leonard Maltin called Grace Quigley an "abysmal misfire" but praised The Ultimate Solution, which was never released to the general public.

HIFF screens the Writer's Cut, followed by a Q+A with Zweiback

ARUN CHAUDHARY

A Brit reveals North Korea in the documentary A State of Mind

t's always difficult to depict one's adversaries in an honest manner. The British are better at this delicate task than the Americans. While Frank Capra produced the incendiary Know Your Enemy: Japan, Humphrey Jennings made Listen To Britain, featuring a Blitz-time concert of German classical music as German bombers destroy London. Another Brit, Daniel Gordon, doesn't go quite that far in his recent documentary about North Korea, but filming in the world's most entrenched state requires a different finesse.

A State Of Mind, which is a nominated documentary in this year's HIFF, follows two North Korean girls, ages 11 and 13, as they prepare to participate in the Mass Games, an event roughly the size of two Super Bowls, the length of Wagner's Ring Cycle, and as intense as a Republican National Convention.

The premise is excellent. The North Koreans are proud of their young gymnasts and are eager to grant foreigners access to themand to observe anything in the Democratic People's Republic is to observe some form of control.

Standing the girls in for North Korean society is powerful, but Gordon doesn't always trust his primary material. The narrator need not explain that the games represent North Korean uniformity, for the propaganda-blaring radio (a perfect replica of the one Donald Duck contends with in Der Fuehrer's Face, an anti-Nazi short Disney produced in 1942) present in every room tells the story more elegantly. The volume can be turned down, but never off.

A State Of Mind is the first documentary shot by an outsider in North Korea and aspires to be comprehensive. Exposition diminishes the power of the observational sections but is saved from becoming Ken Burnsesque by the quality of the stills and archival footage.

The verité scenes are the film's best material. In one sequence, Gordon sets two displays of North Korean patriotism back to back. First the girls' revolutionary history teacher asks the children to recite the three ways in which Kim Jong Il is great. They respond—with sincerity—that he is great in ideology, leadership and aura. In the next scene, a young gymnast belts out to the trainees a song praising Kim Jong II, which might as well be "Waterloo" by ABBA. The joy comes from being with the group, the feeling of inclusion that characterizes a pack of wolves.

One flaw: The combination of observational and essavistic documentary styles creates structural confusion. The film is loosely chronological, but the month-bymonth title cards are far between. One sequence ends with the narrator saying, "No one knows when North Korea will open its borders again," then fades into "11 days later, the border was reopened." It's like a 48 Hours episode, albeit a particularly beautiful one.

At the heart of the difference between ideology and unity lies the dominant Korean faith in self-reliance. The father delivers a speech that would make any Republican proud, saying self-reliance means that what the state won't provide for you; you must provide for vourself. In this light, the question of whether Kim Jong Il will show at the Mass Games comes to resemble Waiting for Guffman rather than Godot. Ideology, even leadership (however brutal), is the icing; the Mass Games are the cake.

The games—stunningly shot provide a powerful ending. The sheer numbers of people involved gave the filmmakers shot opportunities that Leni Riefenstahl had to create with camera tricks. When the subjects watch the games, they comment on the uniformity with admiration: "No wonder the Americans fear us.'

Though Gordon portrays the North Koreans sympathetically, he never deals with them on their own terms. The film teems with casual praise of Kim Jong II, which starts to feel rote, as if it was part of the language itself, making the North Koreans seem like dupes, dumb enough to allow their overlords to feed them an inflated selfopinion while the rest of the world knows better.

In 1971, a group of scholars, the CCAS, were the first academics to enter China in 20 years. They asked an old woman what she thought of her government calling the Chinese proletariat the most important people in the world. She said she already knew they were, her foreign visitors proved it. The presence of the filmmakers confirms North Korea's importance as do biweekly threats against the nation by outside forces. With or without their leaders or their party program, the North Koreans in A State Of Mind seem like a people willing to stick it out together.

iolinist Jennifer Koh joins the symphony for a rare performance of Max Bruch's marvelous "Scottish Fantasy," Op. 46 for violin and orchestra with harp.

The New York-based Korean-American blazed onto the concert scene in 1994, when she won the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. She has earned a reputation for seeking underlying commonalities in music, sometimes juxtaposing works by Mozart and Ornette Coleman in a single show. This adds up to an unusual melodic and emotional range that sets her playing apart from other violinists plying the circuit.

A bridge from the 19th-century Romantics to the 20th century, Bruch was primarily known as a conductor and teacher, and for his choral compositions, which is why he doesn't have the fan-base of, say, Mozart or Bach. His conducting skills and his friendships with several famous violinists are probably the reason for his control of orchestration. Of the violin, he said, "It can sing a melody better than a piano, and melody is the soul of music."

Bruch's work is uncommon symphonic fare. For the "Scottish Fantasy," he draws folk melodies from the Highlands, weaving them into a tapestry that climbs from a somber beginning to an eventual fiery climax in the concluding "Allegro guerriero," which draws from an old war song, "Scots Wha Hae."

JoAnn Faletta returns to conduct the program, which also includes Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor. Filled with trepidation about following a tradition Beethoven had deGigs 11 Concerts & Clubs/On Sale 13 Theater & Dance/Museums 14

ew Zealand is experiencing an indigenous arts renaissance that includes its South Pacific neighbors. Yeah, Polynesian migration is millennium-old news, but there's a modern influx of Tuvaluans, Samoans and other Pacific Islanders to Aotearoa and the Maori have embraced these neighbors, as well as the rough-and-tumble Kiwi Euros, in groups like the Black Grace Dance Company, which performs at Leeward Community College this Saturday.

Dynamic and euphoric, Black Grace's mélange of movement has sold out performances in New Zealand for the past decade, and has moved on to a global and enthusiastic reception.

The troupe is about "Being rough, jumping as high as you can, leaping as far and dancing as hard as you can," writes director Neil Ieremia on its website. "Moving until you feel like your lungs are going to explode as the sweat runs from every extremity. This is what I love about our work."

While Black Grace usually travels as a company of six men, for the Hawai'i show Ieremia has added three female guest dancers. Expect moving, globally human work.

Clubs Big fat concert

Put any four national punk rock bands on a bill on any given night, and you've got the makings of mosh pit mayhem. But put them on the road together for a threemonth tour of all 50 states and you've got a king-hell freak show rivaled only by the Warped Tour or a night with Wayne Newton in Branson, Mo.

That's what punk label icon Fat Wreck Chords has done with the Fat Tour, scheduled to wobble into Pipeline Cafe Friday with Against Me! (pictured), Smoke or Fire and the Soviettes. Each of the bands on the tour is supporting a Fat Wreck Chords 2005 release and all have earned their stripes as unflagging road warriors. Details from the tour journal include broken vans in the Iowa hinterlands, chronic vomiting and problem drinking.

The ambitious tour has been picking up steam since it began rolling in September, with crowds reportedly surpassing the 1,000 mark.

Look for all of the bands to be energized, as they will be performing after a short hiatus after a show in Anchorage, Alaska.

Hey, it might be a long flight, but at least they won't have to deal with a different time zone. And they'll have a few days off before their next mainland gig, so look for them in the usual punk rock havens during their down time. Just be ready to buy them a drink.

Designer genes

Blow Food Hawai'i and Don Brown present two eye-opening documentaries about genetically modified seeds and edibles, providing plenty of food for thought Sunday at the University of Hawai'i's Earth Magic: An Intimate Diary of the Planet film series.

The first—Marianne Kapalan's 48-minute Deconstructing Supper—sends renowned chef John Bishop halfway round the world and back to document the rapidly growing biotech-food movement and its implications for growers and consumers.

Bishop had no idea that 70 percent of processed foods on U.S. market shelves (excluding organic food venues) contain genetically modified ingredients. He travels from Canada to Great Britain to India to talk with both sides concerning the movement of patented foods whose companies retain some control over the seeds and foods bought by farmers.

The film concludes that questions of safety and reduction of crops' biodiversity remain unanswered, with little systematic research being conducted to determine the possible negative effects of this worldwide revolution devised and controlled by chemical companies.

The second documentary—Field of Genes—is part of a 1998 Canadian television report. While it examines some of the topics of the first film, it focuses on potatoes, corn, soybeans and canola in particular.

The biotech industry proclaims that implanting toxic genetic material to kill pests will create far greater yields. Opponents claim that, as in the human body developing antibiotic resistant response, pests will mutate to become resistant to the enhanced crops. As Canadian crop scientist Ann Clark says in Deconstructing Supper. "Nature always has a way of getting even."

Slow Food is a nonprofit, ecogastronomical organization that supports a biodiverse, sustainable food supply, local producers and growers and the rediscovery of the pleasures of eating prepared meals at the table. Look for some of Honolulu's top chefs in the audience.

Digable king

Hailing from the centerpiece of American soul music-Philadelphia-King Britt's name suggests majestic presence and given that he has mastered the art of club DJing and is equally adept at mixing house, techno, soul and hip-hop into blends of sonic bliss, well, the name befits the Britt is probably best known to hip-hop heads as the former Digable Planets DJ.

On the MC tip, Britt's beats are augmented by a plethora of Philly microphone masters including Bahamadia, Grand Agent, Mosez Gunn, Dice Raw and Capitol A. Poet Rich Medina graces several tracks and even the holy triumvirate of De La Soul bust loose on a track.

Oh, one more thing: Britt's Digable cohort Butterfly drops in with his new band, Cherrywine, as well.

Who's Arnold anyway?

AT THE WARMER END OF A SMALL, DANK, WAIKĪKĪ ALLEY there is a burrow of a bar called Arnold's, where you may need to drink heavily to properly understand the decor. On one lauhala matted-wall there is a taxidermied deer torso, proud with antlers and black glass eyes. Next, a yellowing surfboard and a sign announcing Military Appreciation Night; then a large, dark wooden mask with red-rimmed holes for eyes that stare ominously at the bar. In the corner is a small stage for the band. Odds are good that the band will be the Geezers, two sunburned guys, prone to unruly facial hair, crooning acoustic ballads at which you can definitely shake a beer glass—or even the whole pitcher. Their own dry pitcher is prominently displayed on a barstool before them, filled with ones, fives, even a 20 or two; these guys are crowd pleasers. And they're not without a sense of humor: On most nights the Geezers have trained a drunken fan to yell "Geeze this, you honky bastard!" on demand.

The ceiling by the bar is covered in wrinkled and grimy dollar bills. Ask the bartender who Arnold is, and she may point, smirking, to the beer tap, which is festively adorned with a 14-inch plastic-though nonetheless vascular-priapus.

Those offended by such a phallus are free to divert their eyes to, say, a flaccid rubber chicken hanging by the door to the ice machine, or to the layered rows of bottles by the well that glimmer and reflect the flickers of lit cigarettes, camera flashes and a monster machines documentary on the television. Upstairs there is a small room for playing darts and a balcony for spying directly down on the bar.

There aren't any locks on the bathroom doors, therefore one is guaranteed to make an awkward friend if one hasn't already met the mother of the bartender, a gray-braided baby boomer who, swaying across the room whilst mingling with young military heroes and disheveled tourists, seems content whispering cryptic poetry to newcomers; like Circe before the swine. Drinks are not expensive, and there aren't any pūpū beyond fries and onion rings. Arnold's, in other words, won't break the bank, but will yank the stank crank. While there are few Waikīkī bars that could inspire such rhymes and musings, let it be known that Arnold's is one of them. The only thing it has in common with other spots is the dollar bills on the ceiling and the sticky puddles on the floor. One of the last originals in a sea of McNightclubs, Arnold's is a survivor that exudes a sense of wearied —J. Bird Richardson honor.

Skaters electronically converge at HI-Rolling Media

Rolling online

LESA GRIFFITH

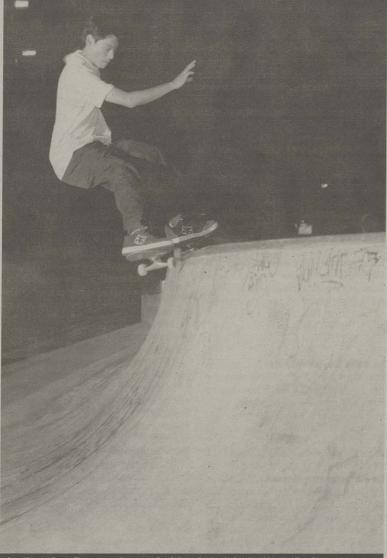

t's payback time. That's what Ryan Toyama says about his new website, Hi-RollingMedia.com. "My friends, like Chad [Hiyakumoto] of A'ala Park Boardshop, Kai [Maioho] of Mishen Skateboards, the guys at Kicks have helped me out, so [my website] is a way to kind of give back to them, help their stores and a good way for the skate community to come together," says Toyama.

For almost 10 years, pro skater Robby Gaskell's 50-50.com was O'ahu's only non-shop-related skateboard website, featuring video reviews, updates on skate parks, photo galleries of skate tours. Then in July, Ryan Toyama, 33, launched Hi-Rolling Media. "I just thought the more things that are out there, the better it is for these kids. The more stuff they see, the more skaters will get motivated to skate. I don't see it as a competition. I go to 50-50 all the time."

Gaskell, who is actually friends with Toyama (the sites have links to each other), says of Hi-Rolling, "At first I wanted to hack his site and shut him down! No, I'm just kidding, I think it's great! Now more than ever, everyone should have a voice and place on the Internet. I really enjoy reading about other things people are doing and riding in the local skate community. It reminds me of the late '80s when different groups of skaters would make little home VHS skate movies and zines. It was always gold to check out what other people are up to. It all adds to the mix and personality of Hawai'i's skateboard scene.'

And the scene, although often characterized as a constant ebb and flow, is growing. "I'd say right now it's on an upswing because of all the skate parks," says Toyama. "And shops like apb and Mishen, and the things they do like promote contests help. Hopefully my website is helping with promoting it too."

Gaskell agrees, crediting the "public park phenomenon." "In the past, it would be people from their own place doing their own thing. Now, I'll find myself riding with guys from four different generations spanning ages 10 to 50," he says.

On the edge: Toyama does a Smith grind at A'ala Skate Park

Gaskell's motivation for starting his site "was a blend of 'geek' and 'because-we-could.' My UH account had something called free web

A former sponsored skater for T&C and Local Motion, Toyama now has the unlikely job of assistant librarian at Kapi'olani Community College. Seems such a quiet job for a man who shreds concrete with four wheels. "That's why I gotta skate after," Toyama laughs. "It's security. I could be doing other things, but I think if I were to do something like graphic design, which I like to do, I'd get burnt out on it. It keeps me balanced."

Toyama designed and constructed the website himself out of his home. "I just learned on my own," he says. He recruited skaters from the tightknit scene as writers and photographers, and welcomes contributions through the website.

In two months, the site has become an electronic clubhouse, where people can read a review of Transworld Skateboarding's First Love video, a report on the premiere of Chuck Mitsui's film It's 8:08 or chime in on discussions ("Rock to fakie at PC on the bank to wall whilst hammered? His legend was already well established, but this just cements his legacy further and forever," writes someone about skater Sean Reilly in It's 8:08).

What does Toyama get out of HI-Rolling Media? "Nothing, really. I'm just doing it for the love of it, cause I love the skate community so much. I'm not getting paid a dime for this," he says before picking up his board for an A'ala Park

In Darkwatch, you get to kill the leather-chapped undead in 1876 Arizona

res, there's very middle ground. Occasionally you get the genius of the indefinable Lost, but usually you end up with the horrific sign-of-the-Apocalypse that was the duet of Phil Collins and Bone Thugs N' Harmony. Nonetheless, opposites will not stop attracting and the strangest coupling of bedfellows in the game world has produced Capcom's Darkwatch, an undead-meets-cowboy tale in FPS (first person shooter) format available on the Xbox and PS2. You play as Jericho Cross, a gunslinger who finds himself fighting to save his soul from a vampire's curse-regardless of how many undead cowboys stand in his way

But wait. Don't leave yet! It turns out the idea of zombies in leather chaps isn't so ridiculous that it takes away from gameplay. Critical to any FPS game is how smooth the controls are for aiming and response time, and Darkwatch does not disappoint. Enemies come in fast armed with specialized weapons and a decent AI that gets more advanced as you increase difficulty settings, opening up some interesting team tactics within the usual "swarm" battles. Jericho has access to an arsenal of his own, each with different specialized capabilities and a secondary weapon built into the hilt to allow for instant transitions between ranged and melee attacks. The only downside is the limit of being able to hold only two weapons at a time—a realism factor that demands strategy and forward thinking or is it just a pain in the butt? You decide. The levels can be linear at times, which may disappoint fans of more open games like Grand Theft Auto, but if you've

What's cool: A half-vampire gunning down most of Arizona's ghost towns.

What's uncool: When your parents like your music, but more to the point—somewhat linear levels.

Every step Jericho takes is accompanied by the jingle of spurs and the ever, in all the fast-paced fights, this attention to detail can be easily missed; so take the time to stop and smell the...decomposing flesh...trust us.

ever been stuck trying to remember if you need to be in this service hallway or one of the other 73 just like in Halo 2, you might find a happy medium here as each area has a unique look. To further switch up scenarios, several levels grant access to a steam-powered dune buggy (seriously) and rides on your vampire horse (no really, just go with it). The Xbox version is also Xbox Live compatible, opening up multi-player scenarios with voice communication to anyone you can find online. The Darkwatch storyline is nothing revolutionary at its core—an anti-hero fighting for redemptionbut the outcome is in the player's hands. The ending depends on the storyline choices made throughout the game and whether Jericho uses his new vampiric powers to help or destroy lives. The choices also grant him powers (not the least of which is an ability to hook up with a bosomy, leather-clad ally in a sex scene voiced and moaned by Rose McGowan). While not taken to the depths of Knights of the Old Republic or Fable, the good vs. evil customization does add to replay value.

Darkwatch is the brainchild of High Moon Studios, headed up by alumni from the Oddworld series, so you can expect a game that's equal parts quirk and work of art. The

It's a week of fours. Resident Evil 4. Civilization 4 and GTA III 4: which, I admit, sounds kind of weird, like it should be GTA VII or even GTA XII. It's not, though. It's GTA III 4. Trust me. I'm the professional here.

Resident Evil 4

I watched Resident Evil: Apocalypse for like the fourth time to prep myself before writing this preview and, man, is Milla Jovovich hot! The funny thing is, I knew a guy in college that was actually married to her for about two months before Milla's mother had the marriage annulled (Milla was only 16 at the time). And as far as I'm concerned, that makes me an expert on all things related to Resident Evil so believe me when I say that good ol' number four is looking like it will be the best one yet. First off, it features Leon S. Kennedy, our rookie hero from Resident Evil 2 and secondly, it introduces a whole slew of new monsters to the Resident Evil franchise. Throw in a few new unlockable weapons and you should be in FPS heaven.

Now unfortunately I don't know anybody who ran off to Vegas with any 16-year-old hotties associated with the Civilization franchise. But that doesn't mean that I don't know as much about Civ as I do about Resident Evil. It simply means I don't have any cool stories to tell. But, hell, when you're dealing with a franchise that has sold more than 6 million copies, you don't really need any stories, do you? All you need is this: new, faster gameplay; a streamlined interface; more flexible techtrees; more civs; more units; more ways to play against your friends; a new alliance system; improved 3D graphics and the return of Wonder movies. Now get out there and buy copy number 6,000,001. And then do something vaguely scandalous with an up-and-coming young actress and tell me all about it.

Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories

Publisher: Rockstar Games Platform: PSP

Price: $49.99

ESRB rating: M (mature) Available: Oct. 24

OK, here's how the math works. First there was GTA III. It was such a kick-ass game that no one really cares about the first two GTAs and, thus, it can be considered the first in the series. Then came GTA III 2, aka Vice City. Then San Andreas. And now we get Liberty City Stories or-like I said earlier—GTA III 4. Now, the fact that Rockstar is finally giving us a version of GTA on the PSP should be reason enough for you to run out and buy it. Hell, it should be reason enough for you to buy a PSP if you don't already have one. But in case you need another reason, just think of the looks you'll get from old ladies and Mormon missionaries as you sit on the train running down pedestrians in your pimpedout muscle car. —Seth McM. hilosophical Music Question #487: How come you make fun of sweaty, pale Floridians when they sing about God on the Trinity Broadcast Network, but you become all reverent and spiritual when Jamaicans get irie and sing about Jah?

Maybe I should drop the obfuscating pretense of the second person and admit that I'm talking about myself. What the hell is wrong with me? Why do I think Black God is so much cooler than White God? Why is the reggae version of "Mandy" that I heard on KTUH almost listenable while the original Barry Manilow version makes me as self-conscious as a burn victim at water polo practice on picture day?

These are not frivolous questions. Great art should transcend boundaries of racial classification, but God songs sound suspicious to me when they're sung by the same American voices that tell me to curse Darwin and renounce masturbation. So much of what grows out of popular culture in the U.S. sounds like just another way to sell light beer and Pilates videos. If reggae can speak to listeners with no background in Rasta culture, can musicians with little connection to Jamaica create reggae music worth listening to? Such is the question posed by John Brown's Body, the reggae band from upstate New York. If blues migrated from Mississippi to the suburban strip mall, then it follows that the roots of reggae can find fertile ground far from Bob Marley's island home.

Pressure Points John Brown's Body Easy Star, $15.98 Pressure Points, the new release by John Brown's Body, is not a bad sounding record. This eightmember band creates big noise with percussion, piano, guitar, bass and horns. There's a scene in the movie Ghost World where Steve Buscemi's character hears a group full of hard-rocking white guys who call themselves Blues Hammer, and he laments that their music has little to do with the acoustic Delta blues he loves. I kind of liked Blues Hammer, and I kind of like John Brown's Body, but I'm not sure I think of their music as reggae. Whatever it's called, the song "Not Enough" works well as percussion and guitar forge a melody so catchy it gives me an inescapable urge to line dance in my kitchen. Pressure Points works best when it whips itself into a skanky, hybrid American music rooted in rhythm. and guitar. Least successful are the Jamaicanoid vocals, which sound strained, reedy and unconvincing.

On Countryman, Willie Nelson's recent reggae Countryman offering, you know what Willie Nelson kinds of vocals you're going to get. Willie sounds like Willie. Remember the 70s Reese's ad where a guy eating chocolate accidentally bumps into a guy eating peanut butter? In a collision of candy and sandwich spread (appearing less homoerotic than it does in this description) Peanut Butter Cups were inadvertently spawned. Countryman mashes Willie Nelson with reggae to create a combination slightly less appealing than chocolate and peanut butter. More like mayonnaise and potato chips. Reggae fans may not think this is really reggae, and Willie Nelson fans may feel their man is over-reaching, but if you enjoyed the recent musical collaboration between Ben Folds and William Shatner, you'll probably love this album. That's a positive recommendation. I mean it. It really is.

Throw Down Your Arms

It only gets stranger from here. Sinead O'Connor just released a reggae CD called Throw Down Your Arms. It would be easy to dismiss her latest project as the next incarnation of an inconsistent performer who has been, at various times, a charttopping singer of Prince tunes, a working mother, a lesbian, a priest and an enemy of mainstream Catholics. More than 10 years ago, however, after she tore a picture of the Pope on Saturday Night Live, O'Connor sang Bob Marley's "War" at Madison Square Garden. She closes Throw Down with a version of that song, perhaps reminding us of her natural affinity for music that is inherently spiritual and political. It's a bit odd to hear her serve up Celtic praise for Marcus Garvey and Jah, but peculiar or not, Throw Down Your Arms manifests once again that O'Connor is a gifted singer who seeks exotic sounds to preach universal themes of freedom and salvation.

There's an aspect of preaching and testifying on When the World Is Ugly, the second release by local punk band Piss Poor Excuse. Excluding an occasional nod to Operation Ivy, this band has nothing to do with reggae. Piss Poor Excuse protests any number of Bush Administration sins and wanders musically through a range of punk styles that allows bassist Matt Love, drummer

When the World is Ugly Piss Poor Excuse Piss Poor Excuse Records, $6.97 (available only at Jelly's Aiea)

Travis Curry and guitarist David Miyashiro to show off their considerable musical skills. (I taught these guys at Punahou. But I'm not disclaiming. I'm proclaiming.) For my taste Piss Poor Excuse is at its best when the band distills its punk anger down to its essential strain of righteous rage and screams: "Fuck You! Anarchy!" You may ask what three college-bound island boys have to be so angry about. But that issue is covered in Philosophical Music Question #261.

Questions & Answers About Our Environment

Are any book or magazine publishers using recycled paper these days? - Debby Greco, Canton, CT

Environmental groups have been advocating for changes in the paper choices of the publishing industry for years. For one, Greenpeace's Book Campaign has been working to convince publishers to switch from non-recycled "virgin" paper to more green-friendly recycled varieties. The virgin paper used in most books has been linked to the ruin of ancient forests in Canada, Finland, Southeast Asia and elsewhere.

Markets Initiative, a group of Canadian environmental organizations working with Greenpeace, has convinced 67 Canadian publishers to make formal commitments to phase out virgin paper in their books. The coalition even provides an extensive list of eco-friendly current titles on its website. Greenpeace and its cohorts have had less success with American publishers, though, going so far as to recommend that U.S. buyers of the latest Harry Potter book make their purchases online from Canadian purveyors offering Raincoast Books' version on 100 percent recycled paper.

It is much the same story on the magazine side, where a few dozen publishers have embraced the use of recycled paper, while the big players continue to utilize virgin fibers, mainly due to cost considerations, in putting out their glossy productions.

The Magazine PAPER Project (MPP), which is trying to get big publishers to take the lead in choosing recycled as well as chlorine-free options, lists more than 60 magazines that have made a commitment to using ecologically responsible papers, such as those that contain "post-consumer" recycled content or that are produced using non-toxic manufacturing processes. The list includes a wide range of publications, from Ms. Magazine to Discover to Shape, and just about every environmental and non-profit publication in-between. MPP, which is part of the nonprofit Co-op America's WoodWise program, walks publishers through their papers' impacts and assists them in adopting environmentally preferable alternatives.

Perhaps an indication of things to come, the 2002 book, Cradle to Cradle: Remaking the Way We Make Things, by William McDonough and Michael Braungart—which describes how ideas of "ecologically intelligent design" can be applied to everyday things to reduce environmental damage—is printed on a synthetic "paper" made from plastic resins. The book's pages look and feel like paper, are waterproof and can be recycled in communities that have the means to collect polypropylene, a material similar to that which is used in yogurt containers. The paper is significantly more costly to produce than paper (for now), but this "tree-free" book, says the book's website, "points the way toward the day when synthetic books, like many other products, can be used, recycled and used again without losing material quality."

OCTOBER 20 - 30, 2005 25th Anniversary! 200 Films from 40 Countries!

AFTER INNOCENCE Employing a brisk narrative style, fluid editing, and an articulate cast of characters, Jessica Sanders examines the flood of reversed convictions that DNA evidence has visited upon a grievously flawed criminal justice system and what happens to those exonerated once they have been set free. A searing critique of a system that fails the innocent not only once, but twice. Official selection at the 2005 Sundance and Tribeca Film Festivals, war each examine their role and connection they have to family.

RED DOORS The story of the Wongs, a Chinese-American family living in the suburbs. Ed, the father and retired, plots to escape his mundane life. After he disappears, his daughters - a Manhattan businesswoman and bride-to-be with cold feet, a medical student intrigued by another woman, and a disaffected high school student in a continually escalating prank war - each examine their role and connection they have to family.

CONVENTIONEERS A blue-state red-state love story set against last summer's Republican National Convention; Massey, a married Republican delegate from Texas, falls hard for Lea, an affianced New Yorker he was attracted to in college, who's now a liberal protester who loathes everything that Republicans stand for. On the big day, both are outside Madison Square Garden - Massey in his red tie, Lea with her protest sign. What will Massey and Lea do? Here's a movie of political bedfellows and the ironies of adulthood.

hen Annie Proulx published her terrific 30-page story "Brokeback Mountain" in 1997, it was immediately hailed a masterwork; but then most of us thought no one would try to make a film from it. Well, Ang Lee has dared, and he has triumphed: His Brokeback Mountain, written for the screen by Larry McMurtry (Lonesome Dove) and Diana Ossana, has meaningfully expanded the story without doing harm to its highly textured tone, and has in fact kept that tone throughout. Lee has never made a better movie.

If Hitchcock was cinema's great artist of anxiety, Lee is becoming its great artist of repression. In film after film, Lee has examined every form of repression, and now he has tackled a love story between two men-a love story, mind you, not merely sexual license. Both men-Ennis (Heath Ledger) and Jack (Jake Gyllenhaal)—itinerant ranch hands in 1963 Wyoming, are ill-suited for what befalls them, and Lee's film follows them into the late '70s,

Ang Lee's Brokeback Mountain is a HIFF standout

as their troubled relationship-secretive and elliptical-evolves...or, rather, doesn't evolve. Though both marry and father children, they simply cannot say goodbye, and so arrange infrequent times and places

Broken love: Heath Ledger and Jake Gyllenhaal as lonesome cowboys

Both are uncomfortable with their feelings about each other, each proclaiming that he's not "queer." Yet the film's ending yields the real truth, which audiences won't soon forget.

Make no mistake: Lee has not made a stunted, well-meaning little indie, poverty-ridden and obscure, with scant distribution. This is a mainstream-style epic love story with the dramatis personae radically altered. The film has the sweep and texture and verisimilitude of a big

Western, American-style: grand vistas, booming music, familiar actors, visual integrity. And at least one performance Oscar nominating committees can't ignore: Heath Ledger gives his best screen performance to date, as good as anything this year, maybe better. His Ennis Del Mar, à tough, taciturn man filled with fear about what he feels for another man, is both a recognizable and original character. (The scene in which his wife, played by Michelle Williams, finds Ennis and Jack kissing after being long separated is both powerful and saddening—and beautifuly done.)

Brokeback Mountain is certainly one of the three or four best American movies of the year; and Lee has clearly guided this treacherous project with a skill most directors cannot even approach. This is one movie you owe yourself to see.

Beautiful failure

hen Cameron Crowe's Elizabethtown screened at the Toronto film festival, it was almost famous for its nasty critical reaction, causing him to edit out 18 minutes. The flawed, yet winning, end product is nowhere near the fiasco it was touted as, and Elizabethtown may have a long, healthy shelf life on DVD.

Orlando Bloom plays Drew, a corporate-climbing Gen Y-er about to stab himself with a device he fashioned out of a stationary bike and a kitchen knife. He designed a shoe named the Spasmotica for a Nikelike company and its mammoth failure will cost its CEO (Alec Baldwin, with a touch of Glengarry Glen Ross hostility) approximately a billion dollars.

Before Drew commits modernday hara kiri, his sister phones with the news that their father has died. Their mother (Susan Sarandon, reduced to an extended cameo) is mentally unfit to claim the body, and Drew heads to his father's birthplace, Elizabethtown.

Elizabethtown's poignancy outweighs the sap factor

What prevents Drew from descending into suicidal, navel-gazing self-pity is the power of love and a script with endearing lines, taking the corporeal form of a stewardess named Claire, played by Kirsten Dunst at her most inviting. Claire is the kind of girl who exists only in the movies. She makes quotable observations like, "Everyone's less mysterious than they think they are"and "You have five minutes to wallow in the delicious misery. Enjoy it, revel in it...discard it."

These are movie characters, not real people. But Elizabethtown is still worth reveling in, delicious flaws and all.

A late-night marathon cell-phone session between Drew and Claire is this decade's cinematic courtship moment. A memorial involving Sarandon tap dancing, a mediocre version of "Freebird" and a water sprinkler system with perfect timing are schmaltzy and...just right. And when Claire makes Drew a crosscountry road trip map and homeburned CDs (Elton John's "My Father's Gun" is practically a supporting actor), the moments of giggly poignancy outweigh the film's sap factor.

Like Garden State before it, nothing resembles real human behavior. The results are life lessons that can be taught only at the movies. But that isn't really the Capra-emulating point. Elizabethtown deserves to romantically spur a generation to burn each other playlists and podcasts.

Opening

Doom The game is turned into a movie, with The Rock as Sarge. Nurses (practical) in attendance.

Dreamer: Inspired by a True Story Horsies and racing, with Kurt Russell and the ubiquitous Dakota Fanning.

North Country Charlize Theron as a factory worker in the tradition of Norma Rae.

Stay Is shrink Ewan McGregor going nuts or are the dead reappearing in space and place?

Continuing

Asylum Crazy times, sexual roundelay and overheated acting from Ian McKellan and Natasha Richardson. Nurses in attendance. Patrick Marber (Closer) wrote the screen adaptation of the Patrick McGrath novel. Domino Female bounty-hunter makes good. Elizabethtown See review on page 27.

Flightplan Jodie Foster returns in another thriller, this one taking place on a plane flight. Her 6-year-old daughter disappears, and those aboard say that Foster is "making her up." The clue that saves the day is a direct steal from Hitchcock's The Lady Vanishes. Shame, Jodie. The Fog Remake of the John Carpenter's horror film, this time around with Tom Welling (Smallville).

The Gospel A prodigal son type returns to the church to find it in a shambles.

The Greatest Game Ever Played It's about golf.

A History of Violence Adapted from a graphic novel, this film seems at first a radical departure for director David Cronenberg. Café-owner Tom Stall (Viggo Mortensen) is a clean-cut family man who might have a secret. When Philly gangsters (led by Ed Harris) stop in at his café and insist that Mortensen is really a killer named Joey, we think we might be seeing a Hitchcockian wrong-man thriller.

Cronenberg devotees and film buffs might be prepared for this, but casual audiences might be drawn further into the psychology of violence than they wish. This is a movie that can burrow right under your skin-and stay there a while. (Reviewed 10/5) —Bob Green

In Her Shoes Director Curtis Hanson (L.A. Confidential) directs Cameron Diaz in what is said to be her most challenging role—a family drama

Into the Blue In this remake of 1977's The Deep, some divers find themselves in deep trouble with a drug lord after they come upon the illicit cargo of a sunken airplane.

Just Like Heaven The casting of Mark Ruffalo and Reese Witherspoon is downright inspired in the screen adaptation of Marc Levy's novel If It Were Only True, a shameless love story with a supernatural conceit. These two actors are as believable as romantic comedies get in our cynical age. And, as a wish-fulfillment piece, this is probably the best-acted romantic comedy since Pretty Woman—and it may be a better movie. If you can't buy into this conceit, two lost souls finding each other, stay away from Heaven. If you're a deep-dyed romantic, you're likely to be charmed by one of the best romantic comedies Hollywood has come up with in a long, long time—happy ending and all. (Reviewed 9/21)-B.G.

Lord of War The new Nic Cage vehicle, the first since he became King of the Box Office, tying with Ben Stiller.

Oliver Twist Roman Polanski does his take on the Dickens classic. Most reviews have been rhapsodic.

Serenity What elevates this movie-beyond the usual sci-fi action hokum is the classic Joss

FILMS

Whedon wit mixed with his innovative take on the futuristic genre. Whedon has an ability to create a living, breathing universe populated with a sense of history as well as likable, memorable characters with full-fledged story arcs. At the same time, he provides nerds with healthy portions of space battles and shootem-up/martial arts junk food. And that counts for a helluva lot in a year that has unleashed Elektra, Cursed, Robots and The Island on a quality-starved Dork Republic. (Reviewed 10/12) —Ryan Senaga Thumbsucker Thumbsucker is working against something, even if no two viewers are likely to agree on just what.

The film follows 17-year-old thumb jockey Justin Cobb (Lou Pucci) on a disjointed, zigzagging journey from winsome loner to highoctane superachiever to something harder to define. After sucking his way through high school despite a curious nature and an irresistible sweetness of spirit, Justin hits bottom and finds salvation in a diagnosis of ADHD and its Ritalin remedy. And suddenly the former ne'er-do-well is a triumphant success. Sort of. (Reviewed 10/5) —Ragnar Carlson

Tim Burton's Corpse Bride After his terrific, winning job with Charlie and the Chocolate Factory, director Tim Burton falls back on bad story development habits with his latest opus of goth splendor. Yes, it looks amazing and for fans of the genre it is very much worth checking out simply for the aesthetic value, but it needed a bit more to prevent it from seeming like a 78-minute commercial for a new line of action figures. (Reviewed 9/28) —R.S.

Transporter 2 A slam-bang sequel: unbelievable stunts and thrills.

Two for the Money Another Al Pacino buddy movie—sort of. This time the co-star is Matthew McConaughey. Old reliable Rene Russo is around too, as the double-crosses abound.

Waiting A waiter reevaluates his dead end job.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit While it doesn't have the belly laughs and the wow factor of a Pixar production, Wallace & Gromit does have the whimsy that was lacking from Corpse Bride, as well as a healthy dose of droll British charm. And as with all decent animated films, adults won't be alienated. Nick Park and co-director Steve Box may not have re-invented the clay-wheel here, but Wallace & Gromit may be the ones to beat for 2005's Best Animation Academy Award. (Reviewed 10/12) —R.S.

What's A Human Anyway?

Dir: Reha Erdem, Turkey, 2004, 128m, NR Turkish w/E.S. Set in an urban apartment building where neighbors, friends, and family live in close quarters, this film focuses on three male protagonists

Director Reha Erdem lends a light touch to the film's narrative twists while also creating a slightly nutty, circus-like environment. The filmmaker also explores more serious themes, depicting the three phases of manhood in patriarchal Turkish society. Winner of the FIPRESCI (International Critics' Association) Award at the 2004 Istanbul Film Festival.

Carnaval Las Palmas sticks with the formula

Más rice and beans

here's something about Mexican. We can agree to disagree about where to find the best sushi, the best plate lunch, the best burger, but when it comes to Mexican food—for whatever reason—we stick to our guns. Is it because Mexican food is composed of essentially the same five ingredients, served the same way, at almost every taqueria and restaurant in America? It's a simplicity that lends to easy comparison.

But what is "Mexican food?" Is it rice, beans and pick your meat, as at almost every taco stand and taqueria in the United States? In New York, chef Richard Sandoval has pioneered nuevo-Mexican cuisine with dishes like adobo-marinated lamb chops atop mashed potatoes. He's Mexican. Is it authentic?

Carnaval Las Palmas is the fourth location in Wilfredo Valiente's local chain, and the most ambitious. If you're going to open a Mexican place in Restaurant Row, in the three-tiered (and kind of cursed) former home of Meritage, just across from the well-established (if not well-reviewed) Jose's, it had better work, and quickly. And there are signs that it may: while there's room for more staff training and attention to detail (a giant decommissioned salad bar sits in the middle of the ground-level dining area), the food is classic Mexican-American, prepared by experienced Mexican cooks.

The first miscue was our own. Given the option to sit anywhere—the place was nearly empty at 6PM on a recent Thursday—we chose a table near the entrance, just a few feet from the cash register. Later, I discovered the large, warmly decorated main dining area upstairs—if you come, ask to be seated there or at an outside table.

The extensive menu is a mix of old hat-tacos, enchiladas, taquitos -and some not often seen dishes. As we made our way through a special of soft tacos filled with perfectly grilled, gently dressed mahimahi, the question of authenticity would not go away. Is something you'd pick up at a roadside taco stand in Jalisco more legitimate than the inventive tapaslike fare served up at swank eateries in Mexico City? Mexico once blanketed what are now California and Texas. Is Tex-Mex somehow "inauthentic" just because the border moved? Does any of it even matter? In the end, the food must bear some relation to the cuisine of its native country, and it must taste good. What On that level, Las Palmas succeeds. What sets Carnaval apart from its lunch-only siblings are entrées like subtly seasoned carne de pernin—four slices of baked pork butt crisp on the outside and moist on the inside. The side of refried beans features whole beans and skins rather than the familiar grey gruel. These kinds of simple touches—nothing seemed to have stayed on the grill or in the oven a moment too long, the sour cream and guacamole were generous yet don't overwhelm-show that Las Palmas has steady, experienced hands in the kitchen. There is at least one true winner—

There is at least one true winner—the textbook shrimp ceviche ($8.95). The popcornlike little blobs of minced shrimp macerate in a tart mix of lemon, onion, cilantro and a hint of jalapeño. (The dish is also available in slightly different form as a main course, with large shrimp.)

My dining companion wondered aloud why Las Palmas doesn't offer a handful of variations on what was our favorite dish. Manager Tino Guzman overheard the remark, and said the restaurant serves "authentic Mexican food, with a few slight changes" to the sauces and spices to accommodate local tastes. (He added that the nightly special is a chance to try something different, such as chicken mole.) Alas. In food as in the rest of life, the devil's in the details—the difference between a revolutionary eatery and a run-of-the-mill Mexican joint can be as slight as an extra touch of jalapeño in the ceviche, a turn here and there on the grill. Throughout the meal, we wondered what had been sacrificed for the sake of mainstream taste.

Desserts are comfort standards, with dense, custardy flan and sopapilla, a compulsively nibbleable platter of deep-fried tortillas topped with butter, honey, cinnamon and chocolate. These last dishes clarified the disconnect I'd been feeling throughout the meal—despite its swank location and ambitions to innovation, Las Palmas is a downhome restaurant serving almost archetypal Mexican-American food. But the dishes are prepared with care—everything tasted good, nothing was over- or undercooked, the salad-topping salsa was fresh, cilantro-packed simplicity. If the management wants to break new ground, that's not happening yet. For now, Carnaval Las Palmas offers the same well-done, reasonably priced beans-and-rice formula as its other locations-and salsa on Fridays and mariachi on Saturdays. You can do a lot worse than that.

RESTAURANTS

New & Noteworthy

A Taste of New York

1137 11th Ave at Wai'alae Ave, Kaimukī (737-DELI). Daily 9:30AM-9PM. Sandwiches: $11.95-$14.95. Cheesecake: $9.95. AmEx, Disc, MC, V.

A Taste of New York is O'ahu's closest thing to a bite of a Big Apple deli, serving overstuffed reubens and Eisenberg's corned beef from Chicago. Fifteen bucks may seem steep to Honoluluans used to paying $2 for a thin teri-beef sandwich, but these monsters come loaded with 11 ounces of meat. Must try: house-made cheesecake. Based on a recipe from New York's Carnegie Deli, it's not too sweet and the flavorful crust melts in the mouth.

Banzai Sushi Bar

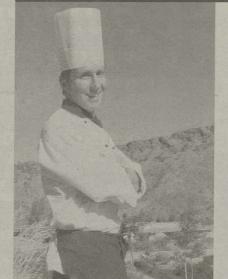

North Shore Marketplace, 66-246B Kamehameha Hwy, behind Patagonia (637-4404). Tue—Sun 5—10PM. Appetizers: $3—$12.50. Sushi & sashinii dinner: $18.75. AmEx, MC, V.

You get standard sushi with a Brazilian twist at Banzai Sushi Bar. Take a seat (on a chair or on a pillow) on the big wood lanai. Tuck into citrusy ceviche, nigiri sushi and maki as crickets and Stan Getz's saxophone serenade you.

Bonacasa's

Manoa Marketplace, 2752 Woodlawn Dr (988-2685). Mon—Sat 11AM—7:30PM. Sandwiches: $5.95. Cash only.

Sometimes you can build a better mousetrap: Owner Larry Yepes, a former surfboard shaper, takes liberties with deli classics—adding veggies and decreasing the amount of meat—to create successful sandwiches. Paper-thin pastrami slices are fatty and tender, and the Reuben's crisp rye stays crisp. There are also pastas on the menu. Take a seat at an outdoor table.

Wizard of Oz

Lemon myrtle, bush tomato and barramundi? They're elements of Australian cuisine, a sort of Brit-Pac hybrid, which is making a splash in places like New York. In town next week is chef Athol Wark, known for using Australia's indigenous ingredients. He's cooking at three venues—your chance to chew some 'roo.

Taste of Australia, Village Steak and Seafood Restaurant, Hilton Hawaiian Village, Thu 10/20 & Fri 10/21, 6–10pm. A la carte menu includes mountain pepper berry kangaroo on a yam fondant and crisp mulloway with a caper mash.

Under the Southern Cross, 3660 on the Rise, 3660 Wai'alae Ave (737-1177), Sun 10/23, 6–9PM. Wark joins chef Russell Siu to create a $65 prix-fixe menu of more than 10 dishes. Highlight: Dinner is preceded by a tasting of 20 Australian wines. To reserve, call the Vintage Wine Cellar at 523-WINE.

Hawaii International Film Festival screening of Three Dollars, Hawaii Theatre, 1130 Bethel St, Wed 10/26, 6:30–8PM.. Attend the HIFF screening of this new Australian and you get to graze on Wark's gourmet appetizers. For the reception and movie: $50. Call the Australian American Chamber of Commerce at 526-2242. Leave a message and you'll be contacted.

South Shore Grill

The latest restaurant entrant in pho-rich Chinatown is Thai, with a lineup of familiar dishes done well with quality ingredients. A menu star is the short ribs braised in massaman curry—your spoon sinks into the long-simmered meat. Neighborhood office workers pour in for the $8.95 all-you-can-eat buffet.

Diamond Head Grill

W Honolulu, 2885 Kalākaua Ave (922-3734, www.w-dhg.com). Daily 7AM—2:30PM, 6–11PM. Starters: $11–$18. Entrées: $25–$45. AmEx, MC, V.

New chef Guillaume Burlion breathes new life into what was a fading hotel restaurant. The Frenchman's classical background is evident in dishes like an eggshell filled with a very adult pabulum of egg, lobster, foie gras and truffle. Some of the simplest items are the best: like the stack of pineapple tomato slices drizzled with tart shiso vinaigrette.

808 Kapahulu

808 Kapahulu Ave at Winam St (737-8081). Sun—Thu 6PM—1AM; Fri, Sat 6PM—2AM. Dishes: $4.50—$15. AmEx, Disc, JCB, MC, V.

Taka Kajima has ended his experiment in swank—now the lights are brighter and the expanded menu includes items like hamburger katsu. The addictive chicken pot pie is still there, but not as rich and thick as it used to be. Plus the place has lost its liquor license. Still, with selections such as Korean-style steak tartare and the pesto-coated lamb chops, 808 Kapahulu is worth considering for a bite.

Jat the Willows

901 Hausten St between King St and Kapi'olani Blvd (952-6990). Tue-Sat 5:30-9pm. Starters: $8-$12. Entrées: $24-$31. AmEx, MC, V.

In his second try at having his own room at the Willows, chef Jay Matsukawa pulls it off. In what was known as the Rainbow Room, J at the Willows looks like part of a convention center, but the well-done food shows that Matsukawa has developed finesse. Dishes like tender lamb, slightly crunchy with a rub of toasted fennel and coriander, get classic presentation on bright white plates. Do order dessert—fruit, chocolate or vanilla done three ways.

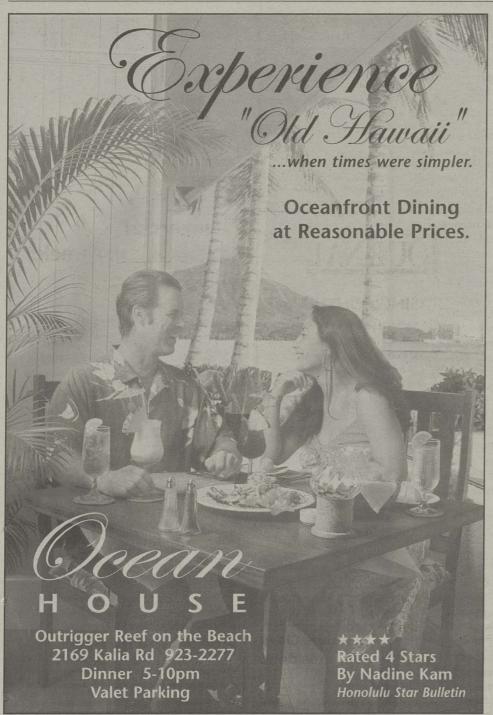

Legend Seafood

Chinatown Cultural Plaza, 100 N Beretania St at River St (532-1868). Daily 10:30AM-2PM, 5:30-10PM. Dim sum: $2.85-$3.75 per plate.

Sure, the seafood is good, but Legend is Honolulu's gold standard for dim sum. Nearly every dish is textbook perfect in preparation and freshness. Look fun stuffed with scallops melt in the mouth

Straight By Cecil Adams

ne of the most familiar scenes in the Tarzan movies is Tarzan swinging through the jungle on vines. My friends and I were discussing this and came to the conclusion that there aren't any vines in America strong enough to swing on, but maybe there are in Africa. Are any vines growing in trees strong enough to swing on?

-ShonEncinas, via e-mail

h, sure. We're talking here about lianas, a generic term for the high-climbing woody vines found in the tropics. One of the biggest lianas, Entada gigas, turns up in both the Americas and Africa. It can reach well over a foot in diameter, more than sturdy enough to swing on. However, you can see where other problems might intrude-e.g., how you'd get a grip. The more you investigate, in fact, the more you realize vines wouldn't make for a practical system of locomotion. Investigate further still and you come to an additional conclusion: Tarzan creator Edgar Rice Burroughs didn't think they would either.

Vines first. Having consulted with George Angehr, who serves as tropical forest expert for the Straight Dope Science Advisory Board and moonlights as an ornithologist for the Smithsonian Institution in Panama, we can state the drawbacks of vines-as-jungle-bicycle as follows:

(1) As depicted in the Tarzan movies, the vines are attached at the top, free-swinging at the bottom. In reality, lianas are attached at the bottom (they're plants, with roots in the ground) and . . . well, maybe not free-swinging, but not reliably anchored at the top. Yank on a liana and one of two things is going to happen: nothing, because the top is entwined in the tree canopy, in which case, being secured at both ends, the thing won't let you do much swinging - at best you'll be able to sway back and forth; or it falls on top of you in a heap.

(2) Actually, a third thing might happen if you yank on a liana. As reported online and confirmed by Angehr, God's own collection of bugs and other little uglies may rain down on you. On the plus side, bisect a liana with a machete and you may find it contains drinkable water.

(3) Jungle vegetation is so densely matted, among other things by lianas, that even if suitable vines were available, attempting to swing on one would produce results less in keeping with Tarzan of the Apes than George of the Jungle.

Don't blame Edgar Rice Burroughs for steering the public wrong, though. Here's his description of how a young Tarzan gets around from the first book, Tarzan of the Apes (1914): "He could spring twenty feet across space at the dizzy heights of the forest top, and grasp with unerring precision, and without apparent jar, a limb waving wildly in the path of an approaching tornado. He could drop twenty feet at a stretch from limb to limb in rapid descent to the ground, or he could gain the utmost pinnacle of the loftiest tropical giant with the ease and swiftness of a squirrel. Though but ten years old, he was fully as strong as the average man of thirty. . . And day by day his strength was increasing."

In short, Tarzan propels himself. the same way most arboreal primates do, by swinging, climbing, and leaping among the branches. Vines play no special role in this process. An episode late in the book has Tarzan improbably swinging through the not-yet-logged-off but largely vineless north woods of Wisconsin, somehow carrying Jane.

OK, it sounds cool on the page. But no flesh-and-blood human has the musculature to fling himself from tree to tree as monkeys do. That presented a problem when Hollywood decided to portray Tarzan on the screen. Burroughs reportedly felt the answer was Disneyquality animation. Since that wasn't in the cards at the time, the next best thing was circus-style acrobatics using "vines" instead of trapezes. (In the 1932 film Tarzan the Ape Man, starring Johnny Weissmuller, circus performers did in fact execute the trickier vine stunts.) Disney finally released an animated Tarzan movie in 1999; I haven't seen it, but from all accounts the king of the apes catapults through the treetops in a manner that owes a lot more to apes (and is likelier a lot truer to Burroughs's conception) than to Cirque du Soleil.

Still, let's concede one point to vine lovers. Orangutan researchers-and yes, I know orangutans live in southeast Asia, not Africa—speak of a phenomenon called "liana sway," described as "a 'Tarzan'-type movement in which the orangutan swings horizontally on one or more vertical lianas with increasing amplitude to reach the next support" (Thorpe and Crompton, "Locomotor Ecology of Wild Orangutans [etc.]," American Journal of Physical Anthropology, 2005). So to some extent apes can travel by vine—and if the infant Lord Greystoke had been orphaned in Borneo, maybe he'd have learned to do it too.

STIRE

(March 21-April 19)
"Honey, This Mirror Isn't Big Enough for the Two of Us," is the title of a song by the band My Chemical Romance. If you'd like to place yourself in alignment with cosmic rhythms, you should say the exact opposite of that to someone you care about—something like this: "Honey, this mirror is big enough for the two of us, and I want us to gaze into it together." In other words, enlist a loved one to join you in taking an inventory of your relationship. Study how you fit together, and brainstorm about how you can make your connection work even better.

TAURUS

(April 20-May 20)

Curses abound. When we're children, our parents and relatives manipulate us into being different from what we naturally are. As we grow up, teachers and coaches regularly remind us of how we're not living up to their expectations. Meanwhile, the news media assaults us with relentless propaganda about how nasty and brutish life is, and storytellers in the entertainment industry barrage us with visions of the worst aspects of human nature. Finally, our enemies slip us their own unique brands of maledictions. That's the bad news, Taurus. The good news is that you now have unprecedented power to defuse the curses that have been cast on you. Follow your intuition to cleanse yourself of their insidious influence.

CEMINI

(May 21-June 20)

Brazil's Ryoki Inoue may not be the best novelist in the world, but he's definitely the most prolific. He averages about 100 new works of pulp fiction every year. On one particularly creative day, it took him eight hours to churn out an entire 195-page story about crooked cops and drug dealers. He's your role model for the coming week, Gemini. Whatever your field of endeavor is, try to supercharge your productivity. The astrological omens suggest that not only can you do so, but also that it will be good for you to do so. Your other role model is Marcel Proust, who was one of history's best novelists. Be as fast as Inoue and as brilliant as Proust.

(June 21-July 22)

Five years ago, artist Dale Chihuly shipped 64 tons of Alaskan ice to Jerusalem. He used it to erect a giant wall in the place where the Arab and Jewish sections of the city joined. The desert heat melted his preposterous construction in three days. Treat this as an apt symbol for a situation that's going on in your vicinity, Cancerian. There is an improbable barrier between two parts of your life that should be connected. That barrier has now begun to collapse at a rapid rate, and will be gone soon as long as you and yours don't make a foolish attempt to try to shore it up.

(July 23-Aug. 22) Medieval language expert Alexandra Gillespie writes that "English is a bastard tongue, an unruly mix of corrupted Latin, Anglo-Saxon, French (in particular Middle Norman), Brythonic and Goideleic Gaelic, Welsh and other forms of the Celtic tongues." In other words, the most widely used language on the planet was cobbled together from a hodgepodge of disparate influences. I hope that inspires you, Leo, to take full advantage of the mishmash you're nurturing. As you borrow and patch, appropriate and blend, scavenge and integrate, be mindful of the rich potentials inherent in your hybrid creation.

VIRGO

(Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

It's high time for you to lose control-in the most constructive way possible, please. You can no longer afford to be as tightly wound as you've been lately. To get yourself in the mood for breakthroughs that will prevent breakdowns, consider carrying out some of the following acts. Fingerpaint on your TV screen. Dance on your bed, imitating a black bear that has drunk a bottle of vodka. Ask an intimate friend to use lipstick to write "I am inscrutable" on your belly. Have dinner with a person who makes you uncomfortable in an interesting way. Buy a bull penis walking stick at Bumsteer.com and use it on a stroll to the corner store. Write candid confessional letters to people from whom you've been hiding an important truth, but don't mail the letters.

HAGIJ

(Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

In the estimation of many fashionistas, Libran rock singer Gwen Stefani is a style queen. The New Yorker recently put her on the cover of its fashion supplement, and she's at the top of many best-dressed lists. She doesn't fully enjoy the fruits of her success, though. "I still think of myself as a fat little dorky kid from Orange County desperately wanting to be cool," she told OK magazine. If Stefani called me up for a consultation right now, I'd tell her what I'll say to you: This is a perfect astrological moment to use your willpower, your imagination, and your sense of humor to shed your old self-images—especially those that are acutely at odds with the reality of the person you have be-

I used to have a Scorpio friend who liked to spout the ecstatic mystic poetry of Rumi. (Sometimes he added his own rapturous improvisations, and so I was never sure where Rumi left off and his words began.) Since you're currently in a phase when the potential for euphoric release and delirious catharsis are high, I've selected five of these quotes that are in alignment with your astrological omens. (1) "Close your eyes and see with your other eyes." (2) "If you want to be held, open up your arms." (3) "Quit acting like wolves and let the shepherd's love fill you." (4) "We're not here to seek approval but disgrace and celebration." (5) "Let the beauty you love be what you do.'

SACITTARIUS

(Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

I suggest you find a way to study the behavior of predators without exposing yourself to danger. You'll really benefit from being in an impregnable safety zone as you take a close look at creatures that are dominated by their lust for power. Why? Knowing more about these types will allow you to protect yourself from them in the future, especially if there ever comes a time when you're not so well-insulated. And right now is the perfect astrological moment to study them risk-free.

(APRICORN

(Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

To be completely aligned with cosmic rhythms in the coming weeks, you'd arrange for rose petals to be thrown at you each time you opened a door. A gourmet cook would provide a steady stream of tastes you've never experienced before. A great band or chamber orchestra would come to your home to play for the best party you've ever thrown. A friend would read you stories that deepened your appreciation for how courageous you've been in dealing with your own struggles. And you would enlist the services of your own royal fool, who'd be responsible for telling you jokes, identifying incongruities, and keeping vou flexible.

Web of mystery

Ever wish you knew what was happening on the latest pop-culture drama these days? Thanks to a new website launching Oct. 26—www.prettyfreaky.net—you can keep tabs on Pretty Freaky—the trials and tribulations of the vampire, the witch and the alien as they try to fit in with local culture.

The website will contain videos, short films, mini comics, photo stories and illustrations that will guide fans through the difficult mortal dilemmas and dangerous supernatural situations that these far-fromnormal, attractive 20-year-old women experience.

The project definitely "fits in wit the spirit of Halloween," says Jeff Katts, creator and executive producer of Pretty Freaky. Though the story "will have local elements," Katts says, "I wanted to show more of Hawai'i than surf, sand and palm trees. On the night scene, I've bumped into people that are sort of like vampires."

Katts is interested in how many hits the website gets, how much response the Pretty Freaky project receives. "The point is to get a fan base, a fan following."

For those who can't get enough of, or just mildly enjoy, horror flicks, Pretty Freaky spans the gamu of scary-movie monsters. And for those who like stories with a local flavor, there promises to be something to wet your whistle. Who knows? You may actually fit in.

That is freaky.—Brady Robinson

A grave mistake

Though they're headquartered in Indiana, the century-old Batesville Casket Company is, well...dying to help us in Hawai'i. For more than 40 years, the quiet little store has thrived on Colburn Street in Honolulu, supplying the local death industry with top quality hardwood and metal coffins. According to the staff, the local supplier sometimes delivers as many as 200 caskets a month to mortuaries and funeral homes.

But being the country's leading casket manufacturer didn't stop an outof-the-box thinker in the marketing department from coming up with a whole new line of pseudo-solemn-sarcophagus stuff to sell: Their online logo store offers everything from toy replicas of casket trucks for kids (Happy Birthday, Timmy, now you can transport the coffins of all your dead Power Rangers) to somber desk accessories for bored-to-death CEOs such as casket-shaped paperweights and ballpoint pens resting peacefully in tiny wooden coffins. It may be a savvy Fortune 500 company but, frankly, their business would die if everyone really obeyed the polite words stamped boldly across the back of their trucks: Please drive safely.

Goblins, ghosts & Hollywood stars

Halloween make-up practice? Hardly. A couple of hundred people lined up at Ko Olina last week to get made up and coiffed but trick or treating was far from their minds.

The scene was a wedding. The bride and groom: Kate Hudson and Matt Dillon. The best man: Owen Wilson. The father of the bride: Michael Douglas.

No, it's not real. Universal Pictures' You, Me and Dupree is the latest big film project to hit O'ahu. Directors Joe and Anthony Russo (Welcome to Collinwood) needed hundreds of local background actors last week to portray bridesmaids, videographers, photographers, chefs, florists, crazy uncles, kooky aunts, immediate family and friends of the bride and groom. The synopsis? A best man (Wilson in his element) moves in with the happy couple and becomes pretty much the houseguest from hell.

Will you be able to spot your friend in the crowd? It may depend on the outfit. "I may not be visible," says Terry Olival, wedding guest, "but my pink dress, which I bought for an actual wedding, has been in three wedding scenes—on North Shore, Lost and now this."
