Sprint Presents Lifeline and Link Up Service

Lifeline and Link Up are public assistance programs offering wireless telephone discounts to qualified, low-income consumers. Under the Lifeline program, eligible subscribers may receive a discounted monthly charge of $16.49 per month in most areas. Eligible residents of federally recognized Tribal lands may qualify to receive additional discounts off the monthly charge for Lifeline service. Link Up assistance helps qualified, low-income customers pay the activation fee.

Eligibility requirements vary by state. In many states, you may qualify for Lifeline assistance if you comply with certain income level requirements or you currently participate in certain public assistance programs.

For further information about Lifeline and Link Up assistance or to receive an application form, please call Sprint toll free at 866-827-3290.

NOTICE: Lifeline is only available to Sprint subscribers in limited geographic areas, and for one wireline or wireless phone line per household. You may only receive the Link Up discount once at the same address. Additional restrictions apply. ©2011 Sprint Nextel. All rights reserved. Unsuspecting victims [Nov. 9: Nuclear Guinea Pigs"] The Marshallese people are enduring a holocaust every bit as horrific as the experiments conducted by Nazi Joseph Mengele on unsuspecting victims. Scorned as just more "micro" in Hawai'i, refused treatment or acknowledgement that any wrong was done to them by the US, the government hope is that they die before any justice is done. Tragic and so very wrong.

"oldsurfa" via HonoluluWeekly.com

From guinea pigs to bombs

[Nov. 9: Nuclear Guinea Pigs"] "14 percent of the number of tests, but 80 percent of the tonnage"... 'nuff said. Then there are the Nevada downwinders, Mormons and Native Americans, who each had similar issues. Then the denial of fallout at Hirosaki... They had a guilty conscience but just lied.

Nov. 9, 2011, Mainichi Daily News, data surfaced showing 13,000 in Hiroshima and Nagasaki were exposed to A-bomb fallout rain. Data from a 1950s survey showing some 13,000 people claimed they were exposed to radioactive rain after the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki has surfaced, and the government is being asked to use the data to study the effects of such rain on people's health. The Radiation Effects Research Foundation (RERF) revealed the data after prodding by a Nagasaki doctors' association.

On Nov. 8, the Nagasaki doctors' association sent a request to the health ministry, which manages the RERF. It read, in part, "We want an analysis of the data to quickly begin, and a public release of the findings." According to the RERF, in the 1950s its former incarnation, the Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission, conducted a "life span study" on around 120,000 people. In response to a question about exposure to fallout rain, about 13,000 people responded that they had been exposed. Almost all of those people had been at the Hiroshima bombing, but around 800 were at the Nagasaki bombing.

Oppressed, occupied

[Nov. 9: "Occupy HPD"] We are in the midst of the first ever global protest against corporate greed and their molestation of our government. People around the world are standing together to raise their voice against the oppression of the 1 percent and their corporate welfare and lobbying which are eroding our economy and country from the inside out.

Brandt Hardin via HonoluluWeekly.com

Viewing a (flawed) history

[Nov. 2: "Occupying a position"] I appreciate your comment, but one thing caught my eye that I believe is a major flaw in how we view history. By that I mean a shared idea not something you did personally.

You say "over time our economic system has all but bought our political system" My question is when, at any point since the country's inception has that not been the case? I'm concerned that people believe there was ever a "Golden Age" in our country's history, because it then implies that we are somehow in a downward path and we need to "reclaim" a glory that was bound to a particular set of factors that belong to that moment in history. We need to wake up to the present for its own sake. This is what we are; this is what we have to work with; this is what we know and don't know. And I think we need to constantly assess that, and I like that people are speaking up. But declaring revolution puts everyone on edge and closes the minds of those you want to open. You can either take the money from the 1 percent or convince them to give it back to you. Talking about revolution and not actually revolting fails both options.

Paranoid paradise

It doesn't make sense! The APEC promoters tell us "let 'em see us as we are!" Oh? Barricades and machine guns? Fences everywhere as in zoos? We the animal people on display? A fence around the police station at Beretania to protect whom? The police protecting themselves against the natives?

Is this how we are, or have "we" just gone a bit overboard so the APEC folk can go home and tell everyone what a "paranoid paradise" this has become?

Rosemarie H. Tucker Honolulu

Corrections:

[Nov. 9: Nuclear Guinea Pigs] Lying 3,000 miles west of Hawai'i, the Marshall Islands served as experimental grounds where the US detonated nuclear weapons and tested delivery systems in the transition from conventional bombers to intercontinental missiles. In all, from 1946 to 1962, the US exploded 86 bombs in the Marshall Islands, neighboring Pacific waters and on Johnston Island, which lies only 800 miles from Hawai'i.

PROTEST ROUNDUP

APEC meetings in other countries (even other cities) have resulted in protesters turning out by the thousands. "Vietnam hosted APEC in 2006," said Trinity Pham, who came to Honolulu's APEC week from California along with many other Vietnamese Americans. "They promised good government and to combat corruption, but they didn't do any of that. All they've done is arrest bloggers, activists and citizens who speak up," said Pham as he gathered with at least 300 other demonstrators at Old Stadium Park on Saturday, Nov. 12.

Although APEC dissension has been brewing in Hawai'i, and there were rumors circulating about Honolulu Police Department (HPD) stocking up on riot gear and converting old busses into paddy wagons, all protests were peaceful throughout.

In a tragic, unrelated incident that night, 23-year-old Kollin Elderts was shot and killed in a Waikiki McDonald's by a special agent who had arrived to provide security for APEC delegates. On Monday, about 75 people gathered at Old Stadium Park and marched to the Hawai'i Convention Center in remembrance of, and seeking justice for, Elderts. Also that day, 23 members of Aupuni O Ko Hawai'i Pae 'Aina, a Hawaiian sovereignty movement, were arrested for refusing to vacate 'Iolani Palace.

Throughout the conference, hundreds of Falun Gong practitioners were an unwavering peaceful presence at Ala Moana Park and directly in front of the Hawai'i Convention Center. "We would like the persecution of Falun Gong to be stopped in China and elsewhere in the world," said Honolulu practitioner Jay Zelaya.

"In China they control all the media," added Ben Maloney, another local Falun Gong member. "It's kind of up to us Westerners being here in a free country to speak for them."

Saturday, Nov. 12 found several groups organizing in Old Stadium Park with hopes of marching as close as possible to the Hale Koa hotel where APEC world leaders were gathered for dinner. In charge of the Civil Affairs operation was HPD Lieutenant Larry Lawson who expressed uncertainty as to how many people would turn out. "I don't think these groups even know how many... We're just here to make sure things stay safe and that they are able to voice their opinions," Lawson said.

The whole point of Saturday's gathering was "Bringing awareness about what is APEC and why people should oppose it," said Liz Rees of World Can't Wait (WCW).

About 300 people marched from Old Stadium Park, but only got within about a third of a mile of the Hale Koa, stopping at Ala Moana Boulevard and Kalia Road. The largest APEC protest, it took place on the highest profile day of the event, remained peaceful, and no arrests were made.

"To me, [what's] really im-

One gathering, many messages.

portant is standing with the people of the world... and that people see that there are people here in Hawai'i protesting APEC," Rees said.

HELLO, WAIKIKI

In a nutshell, it wasn't too crazy, at least not compared to what my fellow employees [at the hotel] and I were dreading. Interaction between Australians and New Zealanders was mostly nonexistent, other than that, I exchanged smiles with the Australian Prime Minister during a brief press conference. Although it lasted only 20 minutes, the Food and Beverage Director and myself disassembled and rearranged the back of the restaurant to accommodate one of the highly guarded leaders of APEC. No one was allowed back there, at all.

For the most part, the economies we hosted kept to themselves, and, when they did travel around the premises, were surrounded by their entourage of protection.

During this week of what I've heard some call, "hell," "chaos," and plain "stupid," my biggest dreads of roadblocks, traffic jams, inspection and being late for work, were relieved by simplicity. I've never been more grateful for my bicycle and simple acts of kindness.

Prepared, just like our managers reminded us over and over again, I had my license and work ID ready to show off pronto if need be in a see-through Hello Kitty cardholder. Dolling [myself] up to look less like a bomb threat, eliminating everything unnecessary in my mini T&C backpack, just in case I was scanned and questioned, there went the Dove pomegranate deodorant stick, although I was reluctant to leave the antiperspirant on the shelf. But like every other bike ride from my house to Waikiki at 6:15AM on a Saturday, the cars on the road were almost nonexistent. The sun was almost at that point of stretching its first rays along a dark sky; the old Japanese Obasans (grandmas) and Okasans (grandpas) were already caught up in their speed-walking.

Ready with my two forms of ID, I got looks, but none of suspicion, no questioning, just smiles and nods from HPD, National Guard and all other authority figures.

Work was slow. Hardly any customers, and those that did make it to breakfast and lunch at the restaurant were either fine with all the restrictions or "couldn't believe this bullshit." CIA, FBI, HPD, Secret Service, and National Guard seemed to outnumber the guests by far.

As far as the negativity the conference brought: Reconsider the cooperation of economies from all over the world, gathering together in our Islands to exchange ideas of prosperity, efficiency and humanity, that hopefully, in the long run, will do just that. Reconsider that maybe a bike would have been a worthwhile investment. As for me, the Anti-APEC shirts I once sported so proudly will be used to wipe off my sweat after the normal weekend bike ride to and from the place [where] I make my living.

THE WRIT ON RAIL

The State Department of Commerce and Consumer Affairs (DCCA) recently fined rail car seller Ansaldo for doing business as a contractor without having acquired a contractor's license. The DCCA set the fine arbitrarily at $150,000. The statute involved, however, sets the penalty at "$2,500 or 40 [percent] of the contract total [$1.4 billion] whichever is greater." As Civil Beat reported on Nov. 5, "The law is clear." DCCA could—and should—have recovered $560 million. However, the news Website jumped to a premature conclusion when it added, "In the end, the issue is moot because the settlement wipes the slate clean."

Why be so quick to capitulate? People, there is a remedy. All we need is for some public spirited, fair-minded attorney, a member of the bar willing to represent all state residents, to step forward as soon as possible and file a writ of mandamus demanding that the state DCCA receive the full $560 million fine required by state law.

APEC, All Pau

MATTHEW KAIN

President Barack Obama brought the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) conference to its eagerly anticipated—at least for Honolulu residents—close on Sunday, Nov. 13 at Ko Olina.

“I want to begin by thanking the people of Hawai‘i for their extraordinary hospitality, and their patience, because I know traffic got tied up a bit,” said Obama at the concluding press conference held on the makai lawn of the JW Marriott Hotel with a picturesque backdrop of palm trees and crashing waves.

APEC resulted in protests, back-room trade agreements, and yes, many road closures. It also placed Hawai‘i on the national stage for a week. The conference drew the leaders of 21 member economies—representing 40 percent of the entire world’s economy—as well as hundreds of business leaders, CEOs, journalists and broadcasters from all over the world.

“Usually when Michelle and I and our daughters come back to visit, it’s just one president,” said Obama, “and this time we brought 21.”

With APEC being the primary vehicle for promoting open trade and diplomatic economics among Pacific nations, much of the talk this year involved the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), a US-led free trade agreement currently under negotiations, with the intent to eventually render the entire Asia-Pacific region a free trade zone.

“As I announced yesterday,” Obama continued on Sunday evening, “the United States and our eight partners reached the broad outlines of an agreement on the Trans-Pacific Partnership.”

The United States’ partners in the agreement include Australia, Chile and Vietnam, among others, while Japan, Canada and Mexico have all expressed interest in participating in future TPP negotiations. China, however—like many of the protesters roaming the Waikiki area throughout the week—remains skeptical about the agreement.

Obama hopes the TPP will be finalized as early as next year.

Among the busiest of bureaucrats visiting Hawai‘i during APEC this year was Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. Clinton was the first high level US official to speak at APEC, with an address on Thursday at the East-West Center at the University of Hawai‘i at Mānoa. Clinton also spoke at the CEO Summit and chaired several APEC meetings, speaking in open support of the TPP and noting how much progress has been made towards its culmination during the previous year’s meetings.

“I am well aware that we all have differences in our individual approaches to policy making,” said Clinton at an APEC ministerial meeting held Friday, Nov. 11 at the Hawai‘i Convention Center, “but I also know that the shared belief in markets, trade and investment are vital to our prosperity.”

Clinton spoke of how getting things accomplished has been the primary focus of all APEC ministerial meetings held this year, including those that took place in Washington, Montana and California.

“We’ve even created an unofficial slogan,” Clinton said, “‘Get stuff done.’ And we have.”

The areas of progress outlined—

Yes, ministers sans aloha shirts.

broadly, as was the trend—in speeches by both Clinton and Obama included integrating markets and trade, promoting green growth and deepening regulatory cooperation between APEC member economies.

The president spoke for 42 minutes to a group of about 150 press members from all over the world at his concluding press conference, fielding questions about Iran’s nuclear program, remarks made by 2012 Republican hopefuls during debates and even the recent Penn State scandal. Although APEC specific questions were few among the pre-selected inquisitors, one reporter asked Obama why the delegates did not wear aloha shirts in the APEC leaders’ “family photo,” where leaders have traditionally worn a shirt or a jacket that represents the host nation’s culture.

“I take enormous pride in having been raised in the state of Hawai‘i,” said Obama, “but we’re here for business.”

Showcasing Hawai‘i as a center for diplomatic meetings and as a place of high level business among Pacific nations was touted as a positive aspect of the hard work that went into the summit. But is APEC 2011 an example of what Hawai‘i residents can expect at future meetings, and is that in their best interest?

Many residents lost time at work due to APEC-induced traffic problems, and those who came to Hawai‘i on vacation were greeted by an island-paradise police state.

Obama’s press conference convened just as the sun was slipping below the horizon, and fading right along with it was APEC and all of its inconveniences. The road blocks were cleared; the foreign journalists and delegates eventually returned to their respective nations. In Honolulu, things began to slow down again—in a good way. ■

Unreal, 90 Feet and Glassy

Fifteen years ago, Sublime singer/guitarist Bradley Nowell died. Two years ago the remaining band members, bassist Eric Wilson and drummer Bud Gaugh, recruited singer/guitarist Rome Ramirez to reform as Sublime with Rome. A year ago, they headlined the Point Panic Music Festival, and now they're coming back to town. Expect to hear classic Sublime tunes such as "Smoke Two Joints", "Santaria" and "Date Rape."

Three special guests are also on the bill. Pepper, the pop/reggae/rock trio that has been representing Kona since day one, will stop by on their Back Home tour after playing shows in South America before heading off to Alaska. Iration, the reggae/dub/rock quintet from Santa Barbara, with members originally from Hawai'i, are currently on their Lei'd Back Tour 2011. Dub Trio, a dub/reggae/metal/punk trio from Brooklyn, will also stop by after playing the East and West Coasts, before flying off to Europe.

Conor Keeps His Word

"The ocean is the same color as my ring," beamed Conor Oberst as he showed off his turquoise stone to the appreciative Pipeline crowd in 2008, when he arrived under the banner of Conor Oberst and the Mystic Valley Band. When Oberst dove into "Lua," a certified Bright Eyes classic, he strained and dragged each syllable with the delicate, quavering intonation in his voice that can only be matched by his seriously intense stare. "I'll have to come back in a year or two with Bright Eyes," he added as an afterthought. Three years later, here we are, in the most unlikely of circumstances—the man has kept his word!

With a ninth album The People's Key in tow, the acclaimed Omaha folk-rock heroes will make their first Honolulu debut. Lately, Bright Eyes performances consist of the original lineup Conor Oberst, Mike Mogis and Nate Walcott, plus an additional rotating lineup

Star-Crossed Rappers

According to legend, a blazing star named Kokoiki rocketed across the sky on the night of King Kamehameha the Great's birth. Voyagers of the Hōkūle'a use constellations to navigate with Google Map-like precision sans Google Maps. Compared to larger, more light-polluted cities like LA or NYC, we can even catch a glimpse of a few such stars in the Ward Center parking lot, if you look hard enough. In other words, living in Hawai'i, we're pretty intimate with stars. We welcome them.

This Friday, we're pleased to have another. The underground rap duo Black Star streaks in for a one-night only engagement at the historic Hawaii Theatre. Hailing from Brooklyn, Mos Def (who recently renamed himself as Yasiin Bey) and Talib Kweli emerged on the hip-hop scene in the late '90s with a concise and to-the-point sound as indicated by the title of their first and only album, the self-titled Mos Def & Talib Kweli are Black Star. Got that? Mos Def and Talib Kweli are Black Star. There. Said it. Done. Hip-hop.

Like Haley's Comet, Black Star isn't exactly always on the scene. It's been 13 years since that genre-shaping record with minimal action in between. Though just last month, they appeared on The Colbert Report performing an unmixed single, "Fix Up", that hints at a future record in 2012. But like reading horoscopes based on those celestial bodies themselves, who knows if it's true. Let's just believe it to be. Hawai'i: We got 88 constellations and now Black Star is one.

Celebrity Monster

Now, a world-famous phrase itself, Andy Warhol once feyly predicted: "In the future, everyone will be famous for 15 minutes." We love Andy, but he didn't live to see the current Internet age. If he did, and taking into account Twitter following, Facebook friend-ing and online people lurking in general, he may have updated his adage to: "In the future, everyone will be famous to 15 people." Slightly different words, but ultimately the same sentiment remains: What does it matter?

Before we spend next week being thankful (and proper) amongst our family and friends in front of a giant cooked bird, we should get everything off our chests. We need to unleash our wrath, indulge in greed, roll around and be slothy, revel in our pride, shamelessly demonstrate envy, slobber gluttonously and get off in sweaty uninhibited lust. Luckily, thanks to Apartment3, we can do all of this in the same place.

The latest edition of MénageÀ3 is Seven Sexy Sins, described as "a very naughty fantasy theme party." (Ooh, after last week's Dungeon Reunion, this island is on some kind of nasty little roll, no?)

The evening's guest DJ will be DJ Sho and the ladies of Cherry Blossom Cabaret will be # Little Shop of Horrors is an expected delight Feed Them!

RYAN SENAGA

It's the age-old tale of boy meets girl, boy loves girl, but then runs into trouble because of his man-eating plant. Little Shop of Horrors comes to Manoa Valley Theatre and the comedy-musical is a horror hoot.

Operated by two puppeteers,

Audrey the alien carnivore looks colorfully and fluffily terrific, and "her" chomping moves are fantastic.

The humans are just as good. Pedro Armando Haro is the lead Seymour—and the veteran performer of the production. (He played Seymour in a UH-Mānoa production.) He easily sings and acts his way through the show.

Nicholas B. Gianforti makes a smarmy impression as the abusive Orin in his showstopping number, "Be a Dentist."

Another great MVT show. Go and feed them some attendance!

The Honolulu-based dance theater company Monkey Waterfall explores the life of VIPs in Celebrity Project: Fame at the Venue. Using artful mask work, scathing humor, fluid dance and lively music with Ernie Provencher featuring vocalist Starr Kalahiki, get lost in this critical and starry-eyed look at The Lifestyles of the Rich and Fauxmous.

The Concept of Celebrity itself is a Propofol injecting behemoth. Radiohead's Thom Yorke probably articulated it best when he said, "I want to be alone and I want people to notice me—both at the same time." Who or what defines it, how those definitions have changed over time and mediums and why our seemingly consensual allure to it is inconclusive. Over-intel-lectualizing and thinking about it too much is enough to make you want to burn a stack of Us Weekly-ies while blasting Hole's "Celebrity Skin." Buy a ticket, save your seat. Hey, so glad you could make it. Yeah, now you really made it. Hey, there's only us left now. —M.D.

The Venue, 1144 Bethel St., runs 11/19 and 11/20, Sat., 7PM, Sun., 3PM, $15, monkeywaterfall.org

He Talks Pretty Everyday

Comedian Patton Oswalt recently said "there has never been a better time for comedy—for the general feeling of funny—in America than right now. And a big reason for that is how deadly serious everything is." David Sedaris, widely considered to be the humorist of our generation, is among the few who hold an extraordinary insight into the nature of the human mind and society. Sometimes he can be quite merciless with this gift—in a collection of short stories titled Barrel Fever, Sedaris says, "If you're looking for sympathy, you'll find it between shit and syphilis in the dictionary." Sedaris' essay collections Naked (1997), Holidays on Ice (1997), Me Talk Pretty One Day (2000), Dress Your Family in Corduroy or Denim (2004) and When You Are Engulfed in Flames (2008) instantly became New York Times best sellers, translated into 25 different languages.

Sedaris' writing is mainly autobiographical—his subject matter includes his eccentric family, his homosexuality and his dabbling in drugs and performance art. Although Sedaris' performance methods seem to have shifted from a time where he "just heated up a skillet of plastic soldiers, poured a milkshake over my head and called it a night" (from Me Talk Pretty One Day), his readings are likely to evoke the same refreshing feeling, assuming every once in awhile you enjoy a good milkshake shower. —N.R.

I'm not going to lie, APEC was rough. Even after looking through all the road closures and following the multiple (and often redundant) APEC traffic Twitter accounts for rolling traffic updates, I found myself among the hundreds getting stuck more than once. For hours. Late for important work things, not able to make it to fun afterwork things and a complete and total access denied getting to my own house twice. It put some things in perspective as far as just how badly people wanted to go to some parties, and really showed promoters and clubs how loyal their patrons could be. Tsukiji's for instance, was PACKED on Friday for the debut of a new weekly called XSCAPE. The President and other world leaders looming a mere block away couldn't stop the incredible promoting power that is Bryan Simpson and the Artist Groove Network, Lincoln Jacobs and Level H. Ever since I saw that club, I hoped for big things up there. It's a massive space and so convenient with all the mall parking. With Ryan Goldenchild Wong in there Saturdays and these guys there Fridays, I think they finally found their match made in nightclub heaven.

In the art world, some visitors weren't so lucky, as Vice Magazine video producers in town from NYC to shoot Krink's first Hawai'i show quickly learned. They realized they were staying in the same hotel as the President after being turned around at every entrance to their hotel and eventually gave up trying to even get in. The good news is all this dust will settle come Thursday, and the show will go on. Craig Costello, aka KRINK will have his show running at Loft in Space from 11/17 until 12/9. A big name in the graffiti world after many years in the San Francisco streets as KR—then the maker of one of the drippiest paints out there called Krink—he has already gotten much press across the county to focus on Hawai'i for this show. From New York to Denmark to Australia and back to the West Coast, everyone is talking about this show. The best part? They are talking about our art scene, saying it's rapidly rising—something that's instrumental in the growth of this genre.

This weekend is looking freaking fantastic, as Black Star is retuning for a show at the Hawaii Theater Friday. Talib Kweli and Yasiin Bey (aka Mos Def) individually can stand on their own, and together they totally kill it. It's like three shows in one. Or three parties in one, as they also plan to have the concert after-party Friday night, then host a pool party Saturday at the Queen Kapiolani hotel.

Congratulations to Lyanne Brooks and co. for making 4 years of Soulgasm this Friday. If you've ever wanted to see an entire room just dancing (and dancing damn good) you really should go to this party. Expect refreshingly good vibes, groovy house music and probably a really good way to come down from any frustrating traffic situations. As much as I was trying to go with the flow and not get too aggravated, I find myself needing a party like this. It's OK though, I'm almost back to normal.

"Our list is this big!"

The Return of Shopping List

NIKO RIVAS

Once the downtown sunlight becomes sufficiently dim, the three members of Shopping List wander one by one into the Mercury Bar. Besides communicating through what seems to be their internal Chinatown sundials (the trio only seems to surface at night), they also unwittingly match their outfits to run the gamut of plaid. Vocalist/guitarist Grayhmn (Grey) Jennings cheerfully orders a drink, bassist Amrik (Beak) Sidhu smiles cryptically and drummer Eric Pecoraro sparks a conversation about Iron Maiden. Everyone orders another drink. So far, I get the impression that this all seems to be pretty standard procedure. When the beverage supply exhausts, I follow the trio to their upstairs practice space—it's a tiny, cozy enclave adorned with Christmas lights and anxious instruments that look ready to dissolve the room's silence.

After almost a year's long hiatus since the departure of original bassist Toni Woo, Shopping List has risen back to life with new bassist Sidhu (of Animal Mother, Falcon Lord and Mano Kane).

"Our last show was in October at Asterisk—I jumped into the drum-set. We were just done. That was the last time we played with Toni," recalls Jennings. It was a bittersweet swan song for a band that had worn themselves out. "Our initial motto was that if anyone asks us to play a show, we'll say yes. I'm just kind of singing about a tough time in my life and sometimes it gets rough, like when we overplay songs. I was tired of feeling like shit because every time I sing a song, it's like..." Jennings recoils. "Memories, dude," finishes Pecoraro.

These memories began in 2007. Jennings worked overseas as a broadcast technician. Jennings, often with a guitar in hand, would refine his songwriting whenever there was downtime. One day, he received a distraught voicemail from his brother. Jennings learned that a tumor was found, and that his father was diagnosed with brain cancer, or glioblastoma multiforme. Jennings immediately moved back home to provide support. A doctor explained that his father's tumor was situated in an area that was impossible to operate in, and a nine-month prognosis was given. Jennings slowly witnessed his father (an architect) lose his ability to design, and eventually lose the ability to form cognitive thoughts.

As a way to cope with losing his father, Jennings wrote feverishly. "I initially named a series of private blog-type diary entries 'Shopping List' so that if anybody ever came across it, they wouldn't think, 'Oh, Grayhmn's depressed,'" Jennings says.

Although Jennings used the name "Shopping List" as a way to obscure the sorrow at the core of his writing, not everyone was left in the dark. When Jennings worked at a high school media lab, he confided in a young student who was beginning to become serious with cultivating his talent in music and writing. Jennings told him about Shopping List, and planned to make music with him in the future. When Jennings found out that one morning his friend unexpectedly died, he was on the verge of quitting music altogether. In a last attempt to form a band, Jennings put out a Craigslist ad for band members and met drummer Pecoraro. In a month's time, the two of them played their first show.

Jennings' lyrics are punctured with the inevitability of early and random death and decay. In the song "Howdy," (a song about the job and life of cremators) Jennings sings, "Their ashes keep growing / Blood keeps flowing down / I think how they got away / Spirits cloud the ceiling at least twenty a day."

When asked to describe their sound, Pecoraro says, "We're kind of like an alternative-folky-rock band. I don't know, everyone just sort of looks at each other and we make up words." Jennings tries his hand, "I think the best thing that's developed is 'dark indie.'" Jennings' raw, grating screams paired with Pecoraro's explosive drumming have conjured comparisons to Cursive, The Good Life and mewithoutYou.

The more I talk with the band, the more I realize I am sitting rather contentedly, letting them ask each other questions. "To be honest, this is the slowest the three of us have ever really sat down," says Jennings at one point giddily. "Once we get through some of these obligations, we can focus on the chemistry we have to start being our own band to make something new," says Sidhu.

And what's new, exactly? The band is looking forward to a national tour next year on a shoestring budget (via train). They're also scheduled to open for Bright Eyes at the Hawaii Theatre. "The Hawaii Theatre is one of the biggest reasons we're together right now, I'm not gonna lie," laughs Pecoraro. "It's such a beautiful piece of architecture. It's such a beautiful piece of Hawai'i," Jennings says with awe. No matter how long these restless gentlemen spend traversing the country, it's clear Hawai'i will always hold their hearts. ■

MADE in HAWAII

THE COMEBACK

THE MADE IN HAWAII LABEL, AND THOSE WHO CHOOSE TO SUPPORT IT

In this week's issue, the Weekly celebrates the Made in Hawai'i label, one that nearly disappeared just a few decades ago. On the cover, you'll find the Primo Brewing & Malting Company, a 1913 image of workers who once believed that their beer would make Milwaukee jealous. Their history dates back to 1898, and after surviving a handful of owners who took the Primo name and left the Islands, the brand was finally returned to Kaua'i in 2007, where it's brewed and bottled in Lihu'e, thanks to Pabst Brewing Co.

This holiday season, we hope you'll make the primo choice, one that considers the Made in Hawai'i philosophy. If we spend our money on the people and the products of this community, we in effect protect what our community stands for. And that is the true essence of giving.

For every $100 spent in independent, locally owned stores, $68 comes back into the community. So this holiday, please consider made in Hawai'i companies and products. You'll create meaning and strengthen our local connections.

Included in this issue are hand-picked sustaining gifts, ones we hope will remind you of things which reflect true value.

—Shantel Grace

Taro, Taro, Taro!

Hawai'i Island Gourmet Products/Atebara Chips

When you're thinking about what to give someone this holiday season, perhaps think about what it means to give the gift of history, Hawai'i and sustainability all in one beautiful basket.

Atebara Chips was the first producers of taro chips, beginning distribution in 1941 after the military began rationing potatoes during the war. These chips started a fad leading the way for turnip chips and carrot chips, and eventually, taro chips caught the attention of the global paparazzi when President Obama announced they were his favorite island snack.

Even after celebrating 75 years, Atebara Chips still strives to promote food security and sustainability by utilizing locally grown produce—including Okinawan sweet potatoes, taro, macadamia nuts and ginger—from their own farm and 15 other family farms throughout the Islands.

Nimr Tamimi, a company representative, says that although their farm is used for food production, there's an even greater product they're able to produce in Hawai'i.

"The farm enables our youth to experience farming," says Tamimi.

Their gift baskets come in hand woven lauhala baskets, with prices starting at $25. The Hawaiian Lauhala basket comes with three different bags of their famous original chips, two boxes of gourmet taro cookies, a chocolate bark and crunch bar and specialty chip cookies ($50). Atebara chips are handmade daily in Hilo—the same location they've been in since 1946, when a tsunami wiped out the first operation located in the historic Shinmachi area.

COURTESY HAWAII ISLAND GOURMET

"We're still making and packaging our chips like we did 75 years ago," says Tamimi. "Our goal is to share a little bit of Hilo sunshine with the rest of the world."

On O'ahu, find them in Long's Drugstore, Tamura's Market and Foodland

"For us, it embodies everything about our culture, our history and heritage."

Hardened by History

Lost Kingdom Klothing

A new line of tees uses material that's vintage, soft, blue-gray and tea-stained, and the cotton isn't the only thing distressed. The words "Hardened by History" run horizontally up the left side, and at the bottom of the shirt, a State seal is stamped "Rejected."

Owners Kaliko Pullar and Kavika Puahi started Lost Kingdom Klothing in 2007, and nearly five years later, they've turned their business into what could become the next "Made in Hawai'i" success story. Raised in downtown Honolulu, they say that although they grew up "touched" by their Hawaiian heritage, they were never really immersed in it.

"Our upbringings didn't lead us to traditional forms of cultural expressions such as dancing hula, surfing, hunting, paddling or even speaking the language," says Pullar. "In some respects, we were outcasts, but nonetheless, we loved our culture, its past and the Hawaiian blood coursing through our veins. We just couldn't find an outlet to reflect what we felt inside."

A random news program about a mainland based tee shirt company inspired Lost Kingdom Klothing, says Pullar. "We believe that wearing our philosophies on our bodies is very empowering."

Cleaning up dirty hippies one bar at a time!

Wash That Dirty Mouth!

Filthy Farm Girl Soap

Gretchen Wetzel had a real problem with soap. Her friends called her a “dirty hippie,” a “filthy farm girl,” and that fun-loving name calling, which derived from her working on an organic tomato farm, soon became the impetus for an incredibly successful line of body products.

“She had sensitive skin and had problems with the chemicals in soap,” says company co-founder Devin Asch. “The dirty farm girl thing started as a joke, really, but sure enough, here we are four and half years later...on a busy day, we made a thousand bars.”

These bars of soap made their way to Borneo, Singapore, Japan and Australia from Hawai‘i, where they’re manufactured. (Small bars retail for $3, large for $8.) Asch says the only memorable criticism they’ve received is from a marketing “expert” who said the company name was too risqué, and their ability to succeed was doubtful. When the woman later found their products strewn throughout boutiques all over the Islands, she later apologized.

“We started out with flavors like “Loopy Lavender” and “Chicky Citrus,” Asch says. “But our guy friends said they felt a little weird about using them. So we came up with the Filthy Lumberjack character, and once we had him, we realized everything was potentially filthy.”

They’ve just recently launched their newest line of soap called Filthy Balls. Get it?—Christmas ornaments with a fruited scent.

“The naughty ones are our most popular,” he says. “Our Filthy Hula Girl is a nice one, made from jasmine and pikake. It says ‘Remove grass skirt until naked.’”

Filthy Farm Girl’s products are 100 percent natural; they’re never tested on animals and contain no animal products. They kindly leave out detergents, and other “yucky stuff” and add in a little naughty humor for our bathing pleasure. They grow and harvest most of their herbs and spices, and support local farmers whenever possible.

“Our soap isn’t just about getting clean, it’s about loving your body and the earth.”

So the next time you’re looking for that special, vegan or kosher gift, think about the Filthy Cock Peppermint Soap. They claim, “it’s extra filthy,” and the rooster on the package seems to agree.

What It Means to Walk Barefoot

IOLANI Sportswear

In 1953, Edith and Keiji Kawakami sat on the beach watching the waves, reflecting on old Hawai‘i and the meaning of beauty and style. That day, island fashion took a step forward, and in a rickety old shack with dirt floors, nestled just above ‘Iolani Place, the Kawakami’s brought to life Iolani Sportswear. Today, they’re one of the oldest and most respected clothing companies in Hawai‘i, commemorating more than half a century of made-in-Hawai‘i island fashions.

They’re known for their kabe silk kimono print shirts, brightly colored fabrics imported to Hawai‘i from Japan, and collectors from around the world share their passion for the ubiquitous aloha shirt. These are their trademarks, their details as recognizable as the ancestral Palace name.

Their designers include Kiyomi Hirose and Jackson Morisawa, who trained under legendary couture designers and who embraced the Iolani business philosophy, which encourages innovation, style, an understanding of history and what it means to carry tradition onward. Decades after the first stitch was sewn, Iolani continues to offer an island lifestyle, one where shoes are still optional.

Inspiring Us to Listen

Nohea Gallery

There are few places on O‘ahu where a gallerist spends as much time sifting through Made in Hawai‘i products as does Laurie Baron, owner of Nohea Gallery. Nohea is a space that not only provides a loyal outlet for local artists and craftspeople, but also keeps them inspired.

Passion radiates from Baron’s voice the minute someone inquires about Peter Okumoto (ceramic artist) or Rene Darrow (realist painter) or ti leaf rings made by Ulana o Kukui. She’s drawn to these artists, because she says, “They’re all so different, each [piece of art] with its own personality.”

Each painting and sculpture and pair of napkin rings has its own voice, its own story, and after a while, the excuse not to buy local, for whatever reason, becomes much more difficult.

Comparing Apples to Pineapples

Maui’s Winery at ‘Ulupalakua Ranch

The story of the Valley Isle’s sole commercial winery is one of sustainability.

In 1974, Maui’s Winery, in collaboration with ‘Ulupalakua Ranch, began growing grapes, remaining true to the area’s agricultural heritage. While waiting for the grapes to mature, they decided to develop a sparkling wine made from the plentiful pineapples on Maui. A scant amount of this wine was produced, but the public response was so positive that growers decided to pursue the endeavor of making a still pineapple wine.

But how does their wine compare to the wine of California or France, Italy or Spain?

“There is no comparison,” says Beth Anderson, executive assistant of Tedeschi Vineyards. “We’re the only winery that makes pineapple wine from fresh Maui Gold pineapples.”

Makes sense, but does wine really thrive in Hawai‘i?

“Growing grapes in a region not suited to normal viticulture growing conditions and making wine from pineapples [is a challenge],” says Anderson. “What makes us special is also what makes our business the most difficult. Although there are a few other wineries in the state, we are in an industry that doesn’t have the resources or professional support locally. We tend to be very creative and connect with resources around the world.”

I’m sold. Where can I find it on O‘ahu?

“Try the Liquor Collection at Ward Warehouse,” she says, and I do, and I’ll be back again next week.

Getting Jacked

With every ounce of sound that pours through the speakers at gigs around the world, Afrojack represents the now generation of electronic dance music.

The #7 ranking in this year's DJ Mag's Top 100 should further prove that the Dutch Grammy-winning producer phenom doesn't take the recognition nor the responsibility lightly.

"I'm really happy with my ranking of course, and super proud to be up there with the longstanding biggest DJs in the world like David Guetta and Tiesto and DJs-producers like Deadmau5," he says. "Even though the list is fan-based, I feel the list sums up the EDM top producers-DJs in the widest form of the genre."

Yes, his audio verbage is as sick as it is lethal but worldwide acceptance from the masses doesn't mean he's mainstream, lame streamers. It does mean his original productions and ill remixes are enjoyed by the biggest followings of global proportions imaginable.

"The real fans couldn't care less what a trackname is, who's singing it or even if I produced it with my elbow while drinking a bottle of [vodka], if the track [is] good, it's good."

Getting jacked is a state of mind. Multiply the intense feeling by a thousand and you can consider yourself to be Afrojacked!

Native Economics

Q&A with Maile Meyer, owner of Native Books/Nā Mea Hawai'i

How do you feel about the Made in Hawai'i brand, is it a good business choice?

Supporting locally made products is a philosophical position. It's a good business choice to me because every dollar spent at Native Books stays in our local economy, many times over; it's a true multiplier. It's very satisfying working with local artists, practitioners and crafters. They are some of the finest people I know.

Made in Hawai'i has value, but it is definitely being exploited by people who only use the label to make a profit. To me, selling and developing local products is a commitment to supporting our Island people, creative industries and Island resources. It's hard work, with little or no profit, but it's purposeful work. We want to offer local people choices in how to live their lives—a little bit of extra income can make a huge difference when you don't need a lot to begin with.

I know that it's hard for larger businesses to make commitments to local producers because the costs are so high, but I know lots of businesses are trying, to the best of their ability, to do so. There's a shift in mindset and the world is changing; there are more and more reasons to buy local. Unfortunately, because the Made in Hawai'i brand has appeal in the market, many businesses create products that "feel" or "look" like they were locally made, but they're not. These people are clearly looking to deceive people to make a profit. That's awful, and unfortunately it works. People need to get educated about the difference.

What are your criteria for selecting your Made in Hawai'i wares?

We have a pretty simple criteria—it has to be principally made locally, ideally by the artist and/or their family members. I like to focus on the maker's intent. Are they making something to share and sell or is it only about selling? Typically, when it's only about selling, people are trying to make it as cheap as possible. Cheap is not a characteristic of great Made in Hawai'i products—quality and pride are the things that come to mind.

What do you think about the current Made in Hawai'i label law?

It's tough to get a consensus on these things, but to me, the 51 percent value added requirement feels too lenient. My hope is that the intent of the label law was to create clarity and guidelines to protect the integrity of our locally made products. When the standard is too low (51 percent), it's too tempting; it doesn't take much to "make it locally," even though it's principally an import. Lots of people try to get away with this, and I'm not even talking about the people that blatantly lie about their products, just so they can cash in on the Made in Hawaii brand. Talk about exploitation—we should all be concerned.

Is it true that you helped select gifts for over 9,500 APEC guests?

We were happy to learn that the Hawai'i APEC host committee was gifting the world leaders original oils drawn by local artist Kelly Sueda. We were asked to construct a presentation box, which we did for the 21 dignitaries. The 9,500 APEC goodie boxes were filled with some of the best locally made products. Those businesses did us all proud! Now, if we can just stop giving the imported orchid lei, I'll be happy.

Yeah, no kidding! What makes a person really adopt this philosophy?

My feeling these days is that we all need to be affirming, and make a commitment to get behind the things we care about, even on the smallest scale. There are many great "buy local" opportunities and events, craft fairs and art shows throughout Honolulu. Go to them, especially if they are in your neighborhood. Tithe to your community, spread a few dollars around, it makes a huge difference, because it doesn't take much to make a difference.

Pineapple Crush Pau Maui Vodka

The only ultra-premium vodka fermented from Hawaiian pineapples is Pau Maui, a local brand of vodka that's actually made in Maui. The pineapple provides a clean "mash" from which to start the fermentation process, and luckily for us, there isn't a single hint of pineapple left on the palette.

"Once distilled, we mix it with crystal clear Hawaiian spring water," says brand manager, Melissa Venglass. "We take a lot of care in selecting what goes into our spring water. And, more importantly, what doesn't."

Their unique distillation process uses one-of-a-kind glass stills, and their laboratory-grade glass has a neutral pH and cleanliness, which allows the vodka to be distilled in its natural state.

Distilled, blended and bottled in Maui, Venglass says the response to Pau Maui Vodka has been a great one, and given their success in 2011, they've started selling on the US mainland.

"Our goal is to get in all 50 states within the next two years!"

Historically Pressed since 1928 Honolulu Printmakers

Supporting the art of printmaking in Hawai'i for more than 80 years, Honolulu Printmakers built one heck of a program, which over the years, consistently offers classes and artist exhibitions, summer workshops and lectures. Their prints are among some of the most coveted prints within Hawai'i's galleries and museums and private collections, and according to Laura Smith, the executive director, what sets their organization apart from others like them, is that they have an actual place to work.

Your black Friday shopping should start here...

"We had a workshop in an old gas station at Honolulu Community College," Smith says. "But when we moved to the Academy Art Center, we became more visible. The community access studio became more of a focal point for artists."

Smith says the organization has been successful because printmakers are used to working together. "We share presses," she says, "and [that] keeps us in touch with each other."

What about gifting a membership to the Honolulu Printmakers this holiday? For $20, give something new to someone who either has it all or who needs something of lasting, local value.

Meditating on Cotton Dragon Mama

Dragon Mama is one of those places we wish we had on O'ahu. It's located in Hilo and specializes in the hand-crafting of comforters, futon pads, and pillows and uses organic cotton whenever possible. They're a major supplier for many of the Zen centers and Vipassana groups in Hawai'i, and their zafus (meditation cushions) and zabutons (Japanese-style cushion used for sitting on the floor) are hand-crafted from natural fiber. They also offer ethnic and domestic fabric for custom futons and chairs, ranging from $6-$20 per yard, and their natural fiber pillows range from $24-$82.

Is it really a splurge to buy buckwheat hull pillows ($49) or silk eye pillows with flax seeds ($11)? Maybe, but it seems like the perfect way to say to a friend—relax this holiday, or at least sleep on it.

Happy Feet Island Slipper

"I felt like I was giving up on my employees, Hawai'i and, ultimately, my ability to carry on the Island Slipper tradition," says John Carpenter, owner of Island Slipper, referring to a decision that could've changed his business entirely. To move to Asia or not to move to Asia, it was a matter of money, and in the end, he made the uncommon choice to stay.

"Every year we put well over one million dollars into the local community through our cost of doing business here just so we can stay true to tradition. The local people, the ones who have lived here, raised families here, who know what it takes to make a home here, they know what's real, what's authentic, and what's truly a part of Hawai'i."

Island Slipper was founded in 1946 by Takizo and Misao Motonaga, who opened the factory in the Kaka'ako district. Within 10 years, their sandals found their way to the US mainland markets and success continued with their daughter, Dorothy Kobashi, who later took over the company before selling to Carpenter. Today, the factory is located in Pearl City, where they make, manufacture and supply specialty retailers around the world, including the first company-owned sandal shop in Hawai'i featuring—exclusively—the company's brand.

"There should be a deep connection between who you are and where you're from," says John Carpenter, owner of Island Slipper. "Several companies use Hawai'i as part of their branding or image, but Island Slipper is the only sandal brand actually made in Hawai'i."

Their slippers include styles reminiscent of ancient Hawaiian ti leaf sandals, Japanese zoris and the ubiquitous rubber "slippah." Their shoes are known for comfort and durability, but perhaps more important, wearing their sandals says something about who we are and what we believe in.

The Perfect Storm Anahola Granola

Twenty-five years ago Becky Burns was a single mom living in the Anahola Valley on Kaua'i. After hurricane Iniki hit, Burns decided to offer a solution to a problem faced by some of the hotel kitchens that were out of commission—breakfast.

She started making granola, and that decision was one she'll probably never regret. Eventually she marketed her granola to some of the Islands' most prestigious hotels that serve her granola to their guests. When Costco opened its stores on O'ahu and the Big Island, they too picked up Anahola Granola, and, subsequently, the company now bakes and ships three to four thousand pounds of granola, and roughly a thousand MacaMania bars each week.

The success of Anahola Granola afforded them to buy the Shimonishi building in Hanapēpē, where they continue to offer customers a healthy blend of the highest ingredients, including nuts and seeds and the best unsulphered tropical fruits available.

They use pure vanilla made from Madagascar beans, which they grind and infuse to exact specifications. And unlike cereals shipped from overseas, they bake and pack their granola and trail mix by hand and ship throughout the Hawaiian Islands within a matter of days.

When we contacted Anahola Granola, Burns' husband told us, "My wife is a genius baker... We've considered opening a bakery on the mainland, but we're concerned about losing that made in Hawai'i [distinction]." Truth is, he's right.

What a Tees idkwhat2wear.com

The owners of idkwhat2wear are Karl Miyashiro and Terri Dux, who've been friends a long time. Their wicked sense of humor and Neanderthal sense of fashion are what make their tee shirt company amusing.

"Our personalities work well together because Karl likes listening and Terri loves talking!," says Dux, referring to himself as the idk chatterbox.

"So what is idk?" I ask, and Dux says, "I Don't Know?" and I realize what an idiot I am. We laugh. "I guess you're Korean?" I ask, referring to the "Real Men Watch Korean Dramas (just don't tell anyone)" tee, and he says "no" and for some reason we laugh again.

"We're local," he says.

"Third and fourth generation Okinawans."

I really don't get it, but the humor and the quality of their products impress me.

"I'm guessing you are assuming that because we have Korean Drama t-shirts," he says. "But we don't even watch K-Drama. We just listen to our customers, friends and families who inspire our designs."

"So you like what you do?" I ask.

"We like making people laugh," he says. "We haven't gotten rich yet, but it still feels so awesome when we see someone we don't know wearing our shirts."

I decided to buy a button. I wear it next to my APEC lanyard. It says, "Common sense, got an app for that?"

Four String State of Mind Island Guitars

Located on the second floor of Ward Warehouse, Island Guitars started in 1984 and specialized in used and vintage stringed instruments. Over the years, they've built a certain reputation and now, they have a selection of guitars and 'ukuleles that rivals any other instrument shop in Hawai'i.

Among their Made in Hawai'i instruments, are the Kamaka and Kala brand 'ukuleles, pictured above, which are highly coveted by musicians and collectors.

"We can find [any customer] the right 'uke for their needs," says senior partner, Neil Shimabukuro, who has been a fixture at Island Guitars from the very beginning. "We believe in customer service, and finding an instrument for any budget."

I grew up in Alaska and I've heard this story forever, including when I worked on a salmon fishing boat for two summers. It's the claim of a sometimes lethal danger to fishermen posed by a large halibut landed on deck but not yet dead. According to the story, a flopping halibut broke a commercial fisherman's leg in two places, causing him to bleed to death on deck because he was alone and couldn't crawl to the wheelhouse and radio for help. I've landed fairly large halibut; they are hard to kill, apparently due to a small brain and its odd position, and they flop suddenly and unpredictably long after you think they're deceased. But I can't find anything definitive about deaths or serious injury to fishermen from landed halibut. Want to wrestle with this one? —Wei Ji

As sea creatures go, you don't think of halibut as being all that dangerous. Other aquatic denizens, sure. Sharks, barracudas, stingrays, jellyfish, sea urchins, octopuses, squid, moray eels, piranha, our little friend the candiru... These are names that justly inspire dread. The halibut, no. The only weaponry you figure to need with a halibut is a fork and some tartar sauce. When a halibut confronts its prey, do you think it says, "I am Halibut. Fear me"? No, because fish can't talk. But even if they could, a halibut wouldn't say this, because it knows it's in the peewee leagues of perceived marine ferocity.

You should fear the halibut just the same, as one would rightly fear anything that's huge, powerfully muscled, and prone to thrashing when pulled into your boat. Some halibut weigh more than 400 pounds and have to be killed by beating them over the head with a club. This is best done surreptitiously. If instead you do it on your reality TV show like Sarah Palin before the shocked eyes of animal rights activists, you're going to take some heat.

Native Americans, now, they understood halibut. The Tsimshian tribe of the Pacific Northwest has a tale of a monster halibut that ate an entire canoe, along with the prince and two princesses who were aboard. Bent on revenge, a two-man suicide team paddled out to face it and also got eaten. However, they succeeded in gutting the fish from the inside before expiring, ultimately resulting in the giant halibut dying too. So, just like the ending of Hamlet, only with a fish.

As for the tragic tale recounted above, it's no fish story. In August 1973 the Juneau Empire reported that a solitary Alaska fisherman had indeed been killed by a halibut. Joseph T. Cash, 67, caught a 150-pound specimen near Kupreanof Island and succeeded in hauling it aboard. In the process, though, the flailing fish evidently broke his leg, severing an artery and sending Cash crashing to the deck, cracking three ribs. Though mortally injured, the stubborn fisherman managed to lash himself to the boat's winch to avoid falling overboard. He was later found there when the boat washed ashore—and by God, he still had his fish.

This incident illustrates a stark fact: halibut fishing is dangerous. Commercial fishing in general is one of the riskiest occupations in the country, with a death rate 32 times the average for U.S. workers. Crab and other shellfish are the most dangerous critters to go after, as fans of the Discovery Channel's Deadliest Catch may know—Alaska shell fishermen perish at more than 90 times the U.S. rate.

Sport fishing is less lethal. Nonetheless, horrifying reports surface from time to time, many emanating from Florida and the south Atlantic, which seemingly teem with angry, bitter fish. For example:

- A Florida teenager suffered serious injuries to her vocal cords after a houndfish attacked her, leaping out of the water and driving its needle-sharp bill into her neck, just missing her carotid artery.

- A Florida spearfisher, diving without a tank, drowned when a goliath grouper he shot took off at high speed, wrapping the line around his wrist and dragging him to the bottom. His body was found still tethered to the fish.

- Sturgeon leaping from the water have injured yet more Floridians. In 2006 a sturgeon knocked one person overboard and broke the arm of another when it jumped over their boat. According to a news report, it was the sixth sturgeon attack that summer.

- Finally, sport-fishing-boat crewman Ian Card was lucky to escape with his life after being impaled by an 800-pound blue marlin near Bermuda. He was carried overboard when the fish, which had been hooked by a passenger, leaped over the boat, spearing him in mid-flight. Amazingly, Card pushed himself off the marlin's spike and made it to the surface despite a fist-sized hole in his chest. Rescuers sensibly cut the marlin loose, but mindful of Joseph T. Cash, The Old Man and the Sea, etc, I imagine many old-school anglers thought: What, you couldn't hang onto the damn fish?

Film Review

Absolute Power

BOB GREEN

If you have a more than passing interest in the career and tortured life of FBI devisor and 48-year vet J. Edgar Hoover, then Clint Eastwood's meticulous (and sometimes shocking) J. Edgar will probably seem one of the director's best to you. If you're not particularly interested in Hoover, this beautifully cast and beautifully directed drama might seem overly long and detailed. Put this critic on the side of the angels. This is a fascinating film about hidden lives and the corruptions of power.

Beginning in 1919, during Bolshevik activity in the US, the story shows a 22-year-old zealot incensed and, in the guise of patriotism, becoming a leader in an organizational movement later to be called the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which in turn, became a much celebrated and, later, feared federal force, gaining more and more power with Hoover at its helm. Hoover's character arc, from idealist to a self-deluded monster, is a half-century of psychological confusions and fierce, obsessive control, some of which seemed to approach sociopathy. He kept files on anyone he thought an enemy and, later, on those he wished to blackmail in order to accrue even more power. By the end of his reign, Hoover was one of the most powerful and reviled men in the US.

Hoover's multi-branched private life seems a good place to start: heavily-influenced by a severe mother (Judi Dench), in a strong, non-sexual relationship with life-long secretary Helen Gandy (Naomi Watts, almost unrecognizable), adversarial relationships with a host of American presidents, and, until his will for more and more power overcame his personality, a strong homosexual affection/need for his assistant, handsome Clyde Tolson (Armie Hammer), a feeling returned for decades but without proof to anyone, including our movie-makers, that sex ever occurred between the two inseparable, deeply close friends.

A person needed to be seen as a heroic man, Hoover, in dictating his memoir-like manuscripts, lied heavily in an obsession, which he apparently finally believed. To further secure his grip on the Washington, DC culture, Hoover had his agents spy on the celebrated: Eleanor Roosevelt's lesbian relationship, Nixon's brother, homosexual activity in the House and Senate, alleged Communist affiliations among well-known writers and extra-marital affairs among the "happily married famous." And on and on, including a vendetta against Martin Luther King, Jr.

In many ways, this could be Leonardo DiCaprio's best screen performance. He ages convincingly from age 22 into his 70s. Watts shines, as usual, in her role. And Dench makes us believe in the power of Hoover's mother.

With good but unobtrusive production values, J. Edgar, as written by Dustin Lance Black (Milk), is methodical and convincing. People who like this ambitious film will like it very much. But be cautioned: Not everyone will like it. It is not a fairy tale romance. Among other things, it is a tragic love story. ■

Visually Nuts

RYAN SENAGA

Director Tarsem Singh is visually nuts. Check out The Cell and The Fall. The storylines ain't much, but the two movies are a "wow" to look at. Thus, as the choice to direct the 300-wanna-be Immortals, Singh is an odd selection, which makes one look a bit deeper at this project. It's a thankless exercise though. The movie is just a bonehead-dumb boy flick, but the blood, guts

Immortals is a decent 300-wanna-be

and fabulous costumery is still entertaining.

The fearsome King Hyperion (Mickey Rourke) has decided to slaughter the world and defy the gods. Little does he know, Zeus has been training a mortal—young Theseus (Henry Cavill from The Tudors)—to save mankind. But, if Hyperion gets his mitts on a super-duper bow that shoots CGI arrows, he can unleash the Titans—a vicious bunch of growling dudes covered in drying white paint.

There are all kinds of un-subtle lasciviousness going on here. A slave who is too tired to drink water on his own is fed liquids through the mouth of a virgin oracle. A traitor is castrated via sledgehammer. And when the gods finally decide to get medieval on Hyperion asses, computer-generated heads explode at the whack of a golden mallet.

Everything looks fantastic. (Although the 3-D is, again, a detriment here. Singh's bright, popping color palate suffers under the darkened goggles.)

Cavill, soon to be our new Superman, is sufficiently heroic, and he commendably stuck to his fat-burning pill routine. He's convincing enough in his authoritative posturing to be the Man of Steel we've been waiting for. (Heck, all things considered, with the British accent, he would have also made a terrific 007 if it wasn't for Daniel Craig.)

Just as good at chewing up the green-screen scenery is Rourke as the evil King Hyperion. As a sleazebag ruler who favors torture, cold blooded killing and... walnuts, he has just the right amount of puffy chested, character-acting bravado. Also fun is Stephen Dorff (yes, Stephen Dorff) as a thief who gets roped in for the ride. Dorff described his part as a Han Solo role and his performance really is a great tribute to Harrison Ford in the first Star Wars.

Immortals is a good enough FX time while watching it, but it's not like you're going to want to own it for your home theater when it comes out on Blu-ray. A rental at the most. ■

Occupy Wine Stop

NOT BREAKING NEWS: There's a lot of protesting going on. From Occupy Wall Street and anti-APEC to rioting Penn State students, it's a pretty cacophonous news week featuring voices of all timbres. Regardless of where you stand on [insert-hot-topic-here], point is people are being heard. Loud and clear.

The Carrot Mob suits itself on similar "protest" principles—rallying behind a worthy cause—but with a twist. A San Francisco-based non-profit, the group's name itself is derived from the expression "carrot or stick." In this case, buyers influence positive change by spending money (carrot) as opposed to boycotting (stick).

In the first of its kind in Hawai'i, a mob of conscious consumers who love wine and beer culture will peacefully assemble at The Wine Stop—chosen based on it's operating as a local business interested in becoming more sustainable. "They're also our neighbor, located around the block, and part of a program called The McCully Mile, where we reach out to schools and businesses in the area to help implement sustainability," says Sean Connelly, Creative Director of KYA Sustainability Studio, the firm hosting the event.

For every $20 spent, mobsters receive raffle tickets for prize giveaways. Ultimately, 80 percent of direct sales from this vino mafia will go towards retrofitting the building's energy system. The larger the group, the larger the revenue, the larger a step taken towards energy independence in Hawai'i. Drink to that.

MATTHEW DEKNEEF

Coffice Space

MATTHEW DEKNEEF

Next time you're waiting for a cappuccino, consider where you really are. Right, the lengthy line of our local coffee shop, but where else? Glance around. You may see a graphic designer drafting a company logo. A realtor looking over blueprints via iPad. Law students cramming over PowerPoints on a shared laptop. You might even see me somewhere typing up these little words. That's right. You're looking at me, sitting in "it" as I write this very article: I'm in my "coffice."

A growing trend among the working set, these dubbed coffices (where "coffee" spills into "office") have become staples to many modern coffee shops. Free Internet and courtesy power outlets are the new cream and sugar 2.0.

Fueled by this addiction to coffee and the net, let's just say I've had my fair share of Adventures in Coffice-sitting. I've had to flip a coin with someone over the one open outlet (and lost). I've had a dude accidentally spill coffee on my laptop...and then run away. I once "trusted" my stuff in its workspot while I used the restroom, only to end up chasing the guy who stole my soul! MacBook through a nearby parking lot. Not all days are like this, but I've been through some e-Pocalypse now shit. The horror...the horror...

There are many Wi-Fi coffee shops in Honolulu, but not all are wired equal. What does/doesn't work is learned through trial-and-error. For instance, I use my coffice for everything—drake downloading the new Drake to looking at my bank account while fighting back to tears—and I've found different cafes fill different needs.

Most valuable is knowing what hours a potential coffice haute can put you in a total Zen Zone: that prime window when the cafe is at 0.04–50% capacity, offers minimal distractions and just nurtures efficiency. Every coffee shop has one. Thing is you can't Google when they are.

Here are a few hot hot-spots with coffice-worthy setups. Places that charge and/or set a time limit for Internet or have no place to plug in were not considered. No hard(ware) feelings, Kismet, Morning Brew, Coffee Talk and Barnes & Noble Cafe. You're still on my AirPort.

STARBUCKS—MĀNOA & KAPAHULU

Most days, convenience trumps coffee. I've found these two Starbucks to be the most opportune for securing a station. Biggest obstacle, naturally, is the overcrowding. Luckily I find the high-traffic to be an advantage and get a fair amount of work done because of it. It's like the longer I'm around strangers, the quicker I just want to get out of there. Um, hi, welcome to my brain. I'll take an add shot of xenophobia

Coffice Motto: Where there's a will, there's a Wi-Fi.

A mini-manual to coffee (with a free shot of Internet) in Honolulu

with my macchiato, thanks?

For both Mānoa and Kapahulu locations, I love how the immediate area feeds into their vibes. Count on university students to be going HAM on their laptops—either crunching hard, hunched over textbook PDFs or just aimlessly opening new tabs and refreshing their Twitter streams in digistressed procrastination. During a certain hour of the post-college day, the Mānoa's 10-person community table overflows with so many Macs, I expect to sit down next to Justin Long shooting a commercial there half the time.

TOWN

Best-kept coffice secret in town is...Town. Like any good TMZ-esque tip, it's such a juicy one I can't believe I'm sharing it with you right now! In the early hours, anyone is hardly ever there, there's never a problem with parking, the Wi-Fi is rarely (if ever) spotty and the simple minimalist layout is the visually structured yin to my annoying Virgo yang. Get into Town, and you've found your own little personal Silicon Valley. You can thank me when you invent the next Facebook later.

FRESH CAFÉ

This open and airy locale has plenty seating options with more than enough elbow room to e-mail: six large wooden picnic tables and five personal tables-for-two. The Loft in Space gallery helps attracting a street-to-fine arts crowd, an energy conducive to creativity. Note: Every time I've been here the cha-teau cranks the morning radio which spells squawky DJs and ads for car dealerships all up in your QWERTY grill. Bring earphones. Problem solved.

GLAZER'S

Remember the scene where Cameron Frye is having a deep moment with a Georges Seurat in Ferris Bueller's Day Off? That's the mood I imagine everyone's in at Glazer's: PROFOUND! I swear people learn sign language just to communicate in here it's so quiet. It's like no one wants to break the coffice rules or something, and I smell a cult. (A foamy quality espresso cult.) This place fills up fast, so put on your Member's Only jacket, and hope you're accepted...

R&D

Every cofficer feels the guilt of monopolizing a seat hours at a time for the price of a $5 drink. Studio/office/bookstore/workspace R&D in Kaka'ako is another story—here it feels encouraged, creativity central to its culture and completely on trend. With music from jazz to Joy Division and stocked with indie darlings courtesy of Phaidon and Stumptown, it's got the best books and beats, beans and baristas on the island. All it needs is your brains and brilliance.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

by Rob Breznsky

ARIES

(March 21-April 19):

If you go into a major art museum that displays Europe's great oil paintings, you'll find that virtually every masterpiece is surrounded by an ornate wooden frame, often painted gold. Why? To me, the enclosure is distracting and unnecessary. Why can't I just enjoy the arresting composition on the naked canvas, unburdened by the overwrought excess? I urge you to take my approach in the coming weeks, Aries. Push and even fight to get the goodies exactly as they are, free of all the irrelevant filler, extraneous buffers and pretentious puffery.

TAURUS

(April 20-May 20):

"Judge a moth by the beauty of its candle," said the 13th-century poet Rumi. More prosaically put: Evaluate people according to the nobility and integrity of the desires they're obsessed with. Do you want to hang around with someone whose primary focus is to make too much money or please her parents or build a shrine to his own ego? Or would you prefer to be in a sphere of influence created by a person who longs to make a useful product or help alleviate suffering or make interesting works of art? It's an excellent time to ponder these issues, Taurus—and then take action to ensure you're surrounded by moths that favor beautiful candles.

GEMINI

(May 21-June 20):

In Santa Cruz there used to be a nightclub that featured live rock bands on a big stage but enforced a strict policy forbidding its patrons from dancing. The one time I went there, the music was loud and infectious, and I naturally felt the urge to move in vigorous rhythm. Moments after I launched into my groove, a bouncer accosted me and forced me to stop. I think this situation has certain resemblances to the one you're in now, Gemini. Some natural response mechanism in you is being unduly inhibited; some organic inclination is being unreasonably restrained or dampened. Why should you continue to accept this?

CANCER

(June 21-July 22):

During the time a blue crab is growing to maturity, it is very skilled at transforming itself. It sheds its exoskeleton an average of once every 18 days for an entire year. You're in a phase with some similarities to that period of rapid ripening, Cancerian. Your commitment to change doesn't have to be quite as heroic, but it should be pretty vigorous. Could you manage, say, two moltings over the course of the next 30 days? If done in a spirit of adventure, it will be liberating, not oppressively demanding.

LEO

(July 23-Aug. 22):

"Progress isn't made by early risers," wrote author Robert Heinlein. "It's made by lazy men trying to find easier ways to do something." That's exactly the kind of progress you are in an excellent position to stir up in the coming weeks. You don't have to match the stress levels of the Type A people who might seem to have an advantage over you, and you won't help yourself at all by worrying or trying too hard. The single best thing you can do to supercharge your creativity is to think of yourself as a "happy-go-lucky" person while you go around dreaming up ways to have more fun.

VIRGO

(Aug. 23-Sept. 22):

"Our elders know you don't find the answer by asking thousands of questions," says an essay on the website of the environmentalist group The Last Tree (thelasttree.net). "The wise way is to ask the right question in the beginning." I recommend this approach for you in the coming weeks, Virgo. Given the sparkly mysteriousness that now confronts you, I know you may be tempted to simultaneously try a lot of different routes to greater clarity. But the more effective strategy in the long run is to cultivate silence and stillness as you wait expectantly for the intuition that will reveal the simple, direct path.

LIBRA

(Sept. 23-Oct. 22):

In a review of James Gleick's book The Information: A History, a Theory, a Flood, The Week magazine reported that "the world now produces more information in 48 hours than it did throughout all human history to 2003." From that dizzying factoid, we can infer that you are more inundated with data than were all of your ancestors put together. And the surge will probably intensify in the coming weeks. You are in a phase of your astrological cycle when you'll be asked to absorb and integrate a voluminous amount of interesting stuff. Don't be hard on yourself if you sometimes need to slow down to digest what you've been taking in.

SCORPIO

(Oct. 23-Nov. 21):

In his poem "Ode to the Present," Pablo Neruda tells us how to slip free and clear into the luxuriously potent opportunity of the present moment. The here-and-now is so ripe and willing, he says, so malleable. "Take a saw to its delicious wooden perfume," he continues, and then "build a staircase. Yes, a staircase. Climb into the present, step by step, press your feet onto the resinous wood of this moment, going up, going up, not very high... Don't go all the way to heaven. Reach for apples, not the clouds." Such good advice for you, Scorpio! It's a perfect time to learn more about the magic of the present moment as you free yourself from "the unrepairable past."

SAGITTARIUS

(Nov. 22-Dec. 21):

Seminal psychologist Carl Jung wasn't afraid of applying his scholarly analytical skills to the phenomena of pop culture. Late in life, he even wrote a thoughtful book on UFOs called Flying Saucers: A Modern Myth of Things Seen in the Skies. To be as thorough and careful as he could possibly be about such an elusive subject, he wrote an afterword to his main argument, to which he added an epilogue, which in turn was followed by a concluding supplement. I hope that you are as scrupulous in wrapping up loose ends in the coming week, Sagittarius, especially when you're dealing with enigmas and riddles. As you seek resolution and completion, go well beyond the bare minimum.

CAPRICORN

(Dec. 22-Jan. 19):

A great deal of land in the Netherlands has been reclaimed from the sea by human effort. But the system of dikes that holds back the primal flow is not a foolproof or permanent guarantee against flooding. That's why more and more people are building homes that can float if they have to. "We are actually trying to move away from fighting against the water," says architect Koen Olthuis. "We are beginning to make friends with the water." I recommend you adopt this as a useful metaphor, Capricorn. During the coming months, you should be doing a lot of foundation work. What can you do to add buoyancy?

AQUARIUS

(Jan. 20-Feb. 18):

According to my old philosophy professor Norman O. Brown, "Our real choice is between holy and unholy madness: open your eyes and look around you—madness is in the saddle anyhow." Let's take this hypothesis as our starting point, Aquarius. I propose that in the coming weeks you make an effort to get more accustomed to and comfortable with the understanding that the entire world is in the throes of utter lunacy. Once you are at peace with that, I hope you will commit yourself to the sacred kind of lunacy—the kind that bestows wild blessings and perpetrates unreasonable beauty and cultivates the healing power of outlandish pleasure.

PISCES

(Feb. 19-March 20):

It won't be enough to simply maintain your current levels of strength, clarity and intelligence in the coming weeks. To stay healthy, to keep up with the rapidly evolving trends swirling in and around you, you will have to actively push to get stronger, clearer and smarter. No pressure, right? Don't worry, the universe will be conspiring to help you accomplish it all. To trigger the boost you'll need, imagine that you have a reservoir of blue liquid lightning in the place between your heart and gut. Picture yourself drawing judiciously from that high-octane fuel as you need it, bringing it first to your heart and then to your brain.

ISLAND WISE

OFF YOUR HEAD

COURTESY MOJO BARBERSHOP

Mighty Grooming

A new-meets-old-school salon, Mojo Barbershop offers a solid roster of classic men-conscious services ranging from simple buzzes to traditional full-service cuts. Retrofitted with vintage furniture, tobacco candles and some suave R&B, the shop's mission is razor-sharp clear: Keep Hawai'i handsome.

With flat screen TVs broadcasting SportsCenter around the clock

and rags ranging from vintage Playboys to local Contrast magazines for your browsing pleasure, it's safe to say their chairs are fit for the likes of The Most Interesting Man in the World, the Old Spice guy or Bruce Willis (with hair). Y'know...men. Considering Mojo has a temp liquor license—with a full one anticipated for early 2012—even Homer Simpson would feel comfortable here. Mmm, beer.

The small, but dedicated staff ensures an individualized experience you won't find within five miles of any Supercuts. Prided on hiring talent with actual barber training, this is a joint where you can finally tell your barber you want the "The Brad Pitt Tree of Life" without looking like you asked for "The Chia Pet." Feel the fear dissipate from your follicles knowing the Mojo crew just "gets it" because you're in good modern hands, ya dig?

Mojo also does women's hair. But knowing they can't ever really brandish a Japanese feather blade against your delicate female face—in the shop's signature straight razor shave—is all the pretty proof you need to know you've stepped into a Guyland Stadium conducive to Major League bronoodling.

Whatever your age, next time you're in the area, put Mott the Hoople on your iPod, stroll over to Mojo and get the J.Crew haircut that'll make you feel like "All the Young Dudes." Growing up: It starts at a barbershop.

ON YOUR FACE

Two and a Half Beards

Your favorite bar on Hotel St. is about to get pretty hairy. That's right folks; The Manifest is throwing its annual facial hair growing competition. The Manifest Man Challenge has invited all men brave enough to omit shaving for an entire month. On Nov. 1, clean-shaven applicants donated $15 and pledged to not let thy blade touch thy beard until the first of December. A Fuji Instax photo has been taken of each shaved face and posted on the Wall of Pledges for all to see. Each person in the competition has been entered into a raffle for a trip for two to Las Vegas.

Aside from a chance to win a Vegas trip and the sugary nobleness of knowing your $15 dollars went to help the fight against testicular cancer, there are other benefits to having joined this month long fraternity. Every Thursday during the month of November from 4PM–6PM, Man Challenge members are invited to take part in an exclusive happy hour with drink specials only available to our bearded heroes. As an added bonus for each meeting attended, each Man Challenge member gets an additional raffle ticket entered into the drawing. On Dec. 1, at the end of the challenge, Manifest is throwing a party for all the good men who fought the hairy fight and to announce the winner of the raffle. A panel of judges will decide who deserves the bragging rights as to who can grow the finest amount of facial hair in a month's time. And ladies needn't feel discouraged—mustaches will be handed out so everyone can celebrate the minor triumphs in life and help out a good cause.

—Niko Rivas

MADE IN HAWAII

COURTESY HOKI POKI KONA COFFEE

100% Kona, 100% crazy coffee idea

Best Part Isn't Waking Up

Suzy Betty admits that pursuing a business in the coffee industry despite any experience whatsoever was "crazy!"

"I believed that my uncle's coffee would sell itself once the public got a taste of it," Betty says.

And from the looks of coffee shop counters and boutique shelves throughout Honolulu that have chosen to carry Betty's 100 percent Kona coffee, it seems her instinct was right on.

Hoki Poki Kona Coffee honors her Uncle Fumi, owner of Murasaki Farms, and the three generations before him (including a farm dog named Poki, who, Betty says, watched over the coffee and the land for years). The playful name and innovative coffee blend eventually snowballed into something bigger than she could have ever imagined.

"Our coffee contains the top three grades of Kona Coffee: Peaberry, Extra Fancy and Fancy beans," she says. Her eco-friendly line—The Hand I Heart Collection—is packaged in a piece of art, showcasing original calligraphy, whimsical illustrations and paintings from local artists.

The company is based here in Honolulu, and the Kona coffee beans come exclusively from her uncle's 15-acre estate farm located in Captain Cook within the prestigious Kona Coffee belt. At 1,200–1,500 foot elevation, her coffee is made from beans grown, hand-picked and processed on the Murasaki Farm, where for over a century they've been using traditional methods of old Hawai'i.

"We put a lot of love and time into each bag of coffee," says Betty. "[It] makes people feel good, and does good for the environment. And we're proud of that."
