Last year, the Hawaii Congressional Delegation had the distinct pleasure of presenting Hawaii's credit unions with our first Delegation Resolution in support of your important work. I wish to reaffirm my support and commitment to protecting and ensuring your continued economic viability.

As many of you may know, I do not favor legislation that would alter your regulatory structure, tax exempt status, or insurance fund. I do not favor legislation that would detrimentally affect your autonomy. It is your autonomy that makes you unique, that makes you strong.

In 1936, the first 14 credit unions were established in Hawaii, based upon the 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise, and commitment among members. They were run by the people, and for the people. The duty you uphold to provide your members with the best financial services is second to none. Today, 56 years later, there are 125 credit unions in Hawaii. This is a clear measure of your success, as the 3 "C's" continue to be your guide.

I would like to think that throughout my career, I too have guided my actions by these 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise and commitment.

My commitment to Hawaii is from the heart and it's for life. Having spent 30 years in the U.S. Senate, some have said that I am out of touch. I am aloof to your concerns, and prefer the slick and high-powered life of Washington. That could not be farther from the truth. In all that I do, Hawaii is never far from my thoughts.
Sometimes, unfortunately, it may appear otherwise. What probably frustrates me most is when friends and visitors travel to Washington, D.C., and I have planned for their arrival. However, at the last minute, something happens. I am called to the Pentagon. I am called to mediate a dispute between my colleagues, or to negotiate one-on-one to protect a project, or secure a compromise and a commitment for a future favor. This is not a power play for the sake of power. It all relates, and all returns home to benefit Hawaii.

You cannot know how difficult it is to explain to a Hawaii friend who I'd much rather be with -- relaxing, reminiscing, or discussing a Hawaii matter of importance -- that I must cancel our mutually awaited time together. While it is a very high privilege, on such occasions, it is a curse -- I speak of my seniority. I can only hope that my friends will understand.

I submit to you with the greatest humility that the power I wield through my seniority is clearly fixed on, and fired by, my commitment and concern for Hawaii's future. When need be, I call in my I.O.U's, which come with cooperation and compromise among my colleagues, and with the Administration.

The leaders of the Big Island asked for my help, once and for all, to rebuild Saddle Road. In these difficult budgetary times, $2.4 million will be provided this year -- with a commitment of about $65 million to complete the road. This is the only new road project the U.S. Senate funded this year.

I have been working with Maui business leaders and they asked for my help to make Maui a national leader in high technology. Maui very shortly will be home to a $19.5 million supercomputer, one of only five in the nation.

Even with our national defense drawdown, Hawaii will have $3.2 billion deposited into its economy next year: this works out to about 75,000 military and civilian jobs, plus $770 million for Hawaii's contractors. We are the only state in the nation without a base closure or major reduction in force. In fact, Hawaii had an overall increase. I am committed to keeping our military bases open and operating. They are important to our national security interests in the Pacific, and brought $3 billion into our economy this year.

-- 2 --
Hawaii's unemployment rate jumped 1.6 percent in the past six months. The recession, which has plagued our nation for over a year, has finally come to our shores. I have worked to ward off this slump. I will continue to work to bring home the federal dollars we need to keep our economy going and our residents employed.

Otherwise, it will have a domino effect. The more people out of work, the more loans and mortgages will go unpaid. Your default rate will rise, and foreclosures will become inevitable. We will sink deeper and deeper into a recession, until one day, we won't be able to climb out of it.

But for this, I am called a "pork barreler." I have no regrets. I have no apologies. Every piece of "pork" I bring home is at the expense of other national and state programs. This comes with seniority. And this, I believe, is my responsibility and duty as your United States Senator -- to look out for your interests, and wherever possible, to give Hawaii an added advantage and head start on the competition. I am proud to do it.

There are other times when I use my seniority to bring home something else -- something that money just can't buy -- equal justice under law. The injustice committed against 120,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry during World War II, was a wrong that had to be made right. On the day I was discharged from the military, I promised myself that I would one day correct this grave injustice.

Spark and I worked together, and it took nearly 30 years. As ironic as it may seem, fighting for equal justice is not an easy task. It required both compromise and cooperation from our Congressional colleagues. On August 10, 1988, President Reagan signed into law the Civil Liberties Act which extended a formal apology and provided compensatory payments to the Japanese-Americans interned unjustly during World War II.

From there, I went after the money -- $1.25 billion. It involved high-level cooperation, and calling in my "markers." The old phrase, "the check is in the mail," was just not good enough. The first redress payment was made on October 9, 1990.
In many ways, the challenges that lie ahead for the credit union industry are similar to the ones I face. We must never remain complacent, but always strive to improve our service. During these troubled and uncertain times, we must continue to be guided by the 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise and commitment. Why mess with success?
Last year, the Hawaii Congressional Delegation had the distinct pleasure of presenting Hawaii's credit unions with our first Delegation Resolution in support of your important work. I wish to reaffirm my support and commitment to protecting and ensuring your continued economic viability.

As many of you may know, I do not favor legislation that would alter your regulatory structure, tax exempt status, or insurance fund. I do not favor legislation that would detrimentally affect your autonomy. It is your autonomy that makes you unique, that makes you strong.

In 1936, the first 14 credit unions were established in Hawaii, based upon the 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise, and commitment among members. They were run by the people, and for the people. The duty you uphold to provide your members with the best financial services is second to none. Today, 56 years later, there are 125 credit unions in Hawaii. This is a clear measure of your success, as the 3 "C's" continue to be your guide.

I would like to think that throughout my career, I too have guided my actions by these 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise and commitment.
My commitment to Hawaii is from the heart and it's for life. Having spent 30 years in the U.S. Senate, some have said that I am out of touch. I am aloof to your concerns, and prefer the slick and high-powered life of Washington. That could not be farther from the truth. In all that I do, Hawaii is never far from my thoughts.

Sometimes, unfortunately, it may appear otherwise. What probably frustrates me most is when friends and visitors travel to Washington, D.C., and I have planned for their arrival. However, at the last minute something happens. I am called to the Pentagon. I am called to mediate a dispute between my colleagues, or to negotiate one-on-one to protect a project, or secure a compromise and a commitment for a future favor. This is not a power play for the sake of power. It all relates, and all returns home to benefit Hawaii.

You cannot know how difficult it is to explain to a Hawaii friend who I'd much rather be with -- relaxing, reminiscing, or discussing a Hawaii matter of importance -- that I must cancel our mutually awaited time together. While it is a very high privilege, on such occasions it is a curse -- I speak of my seniority. I can only hope that my friends will understand.
I submit to you with the greatest humility that the power I wield through my seniority is clearly fixed on and fired by my commitment and concern for Hawaii's future. When need be -- I call in my I.O.U's, which come with cooperation and compromise among my colleagues and with the Administration.

The leaders of the Big Island asked for my help to, once and for all, rebuild Saddle Road. In these difficult budgetary times, $2.4 million will be provided this year -- with a commitment of about $65 million to complete the road. This is the only new road project the Senate funded this year.

I have been working with Maui business leaders and they asked for my help to make Maui a national leader in high technology. Maui very shortly will be home to a $19.5 million supercomputer, one of only five in the nation.

Even with our national defense drawdown, Hawaii will have $3.2 billion deposited into its economy next year: this works out to about 75,000 military and civilian jobs, plus $770 million for Hawaii's contractors. We are the only state in the nation without a base closure or major reduction in force. In fact, Hawaii had an overall increase. I am committed to keeping our military bases open and operating. They are important to our national security.
interests in the Pacific, and brought $3 billion into our economy this year.

Hawaii's unemployment rate jumped 1.6 percent in the past six months. The recession, which has plagued our nation for over a year, has finally come to our shores. I have worked to ward off this slump. I will continue to work to bring home the federal dollars we need to keep our economy going and our residents employed.

Otherwise, it will have a domino effect. The more people out of work, the more loans and mortgages will go unpaid. Your default rate will rise, and foreclosures will become inevitable. We will sink deeper and deeper into a recession until one day, we won't be able to climb out of it.

But for this, I am called a "pork barreler." I have no regrets. I have no apologies. Every piece of "pork" I bring home is at the expense of other national and state programs. This comes with seniority. And this, I believe, is my responsibility and duty as your United States Senator -- to look out for your interests, and wherever possible, to give Hawaii an added advantage and head start on the competition. I am proud to do it.
There are other times when I use my seniority to bring home something else -- something that money just can't buy -- equal justice under law. The injustice committed against 120,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry during World War II was a wrong that had to be made right. On the day I was discharged from the military, I promised myself that I would one day correct this grave injustice.

Spark and I worked together, and it took nearly 30 years. As ironic as it may seem, fighting for equal justice is not an easy task. It required both compromise and cooperation from our Congressional colleagues. On August 10, 1988, President Reagan signed into law the Civil Liberties Act which extended a formal apology and provided compensatory payments to the Japanese Americans interned unjustly during World War II.

From there, I went after the money -- $1.25 billion. It involved high-level cooperation, and calling in my "markers." The old phrase, "the check is in the mail" was just not good enough. The first redress payment was made on October 9, 1990.

In many ways, the challenges that lie ahead for the credit union industry are similar to the ones I face. We must never remain complacent, but always strive to improve our service. During these troubled and uncertain times, we must continue to be guided by the 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise and commitment. Why mess with success?
STATEMENT BY U.S. SENATOR DANIEL K. INOUYE
HAWAII CREDIT UNION MEETING
QUEEN KAPIOLANI HOTEL, HONOLULU, HAWAII
THURSDAY, AUGUST 27, 1992
Last year, the Hawaii Congressional Delegation had the distinct pleasure of presenting Hawaii's credit unions with our first Delegation Resolution in support of your important work.
I wish to reaffirm my support and commitment to protecting and ensuring your continued economic viability.

As many of you may know, I do not favor legislation that would alter your regulatory structure, tax exempt status, or insurance fund.
I do not favor legislation that would detrimentally affect your autonomy. It is your autonomy that makes you unique, that makes you strong.

In 1936, the first 14 credit unions were established in Hawaii, based upon the 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise, and commitment among members. They were run by the people, and for the people. The duty you uphold to provide your members with the best financial services is second to none.
Today, 56 years later, there are 125 credit unions in Hawaii. This is a clear measure of your success, as the 3 "C's" continue to be your guide.

I would like to think that throughout my career, I too have guided my actions by these 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise and commitment.

My commitment to Hawaii is from the heart and it's for life. Having spent 30 years in the U.S. Senate, some have said that I am out of touch.
I am aloof to your concerns, and prefer the slick and high-powered life of Washington. That could not be farther from the truth. In all that I do, Hawaii is never far from my thoughts.
Sometimes, unfortunately, it may appear otherwise. What probably frustrates me most is when friends and visitors travel to Washington, D.C., and I have planned for their arrival. However, at the last minute, something happens.
I am called to the Pentagon. I am called to mediate a dispute between my colleagues, or to negotiate one-on-one to protect a project, or secure a compromise and a commitment for a future favor. This is not a power play for the sake of power.
It all relates, and all returns home to benefit Hawaii.

You cannot know how difficult it is to explain to a Hawaii friend who I'd much rather be with -- relaxing, reminiscing, or discussing a Hawaii matter of importance -- that I must cancel our mutually awaited time together. While it is a very high privilege, on such occasions, it is a curse -- I speak of my seniority. I can only hope that my friends will understand.
I submit to you with the greatest humility that the power I wield through my seniority is clearly fixed on, and fired by, my commitment and concern for Hawaii's future.
When need be, I call in my I.O.U's, which come with cooperation and compromise among my colleagues, and with the Administration.

The leaders of the Big Island asked for my help, once and for all, to rebuild Saddle Road.
In these difficult budgetary times, $2.4 million will be provided this year -- with a commitment of about $65 million to complete the road.

This is the only new road project the U.S. Senate funded this year.
I have been working with Maui business leaders and they asked for my help to make Maui a national leader in high technology. Maui very shortly will be home to a $19.5 million supercomputer, one of only five in the nation.
Even with our national defense drawdown, Hawaii will have $3.2 billion deposited into its economy next year: this works out to about 75,000 military and civilian jobs, plus $770 million for Hawaii’s contractors.
We are the only state in the nation without a base closure or major reduction in force. In fact, Hawaii had an overall increase. I am committed to keeping our military bases open and operating.
They are important to our national security interests in the Pacific, and brought $3 billion into our economy this year.

Hawaii's unemployment rate jumped 1.6 percent in the past six months.
The recession, which has plagued our nation for over a year, has finally come to our shores. I have worked to ward off this slump. I will continue to work to bring home the federal dollars we need to keep our economy going and our residents employed.
Otherwise, it will have a domino effect. The more people out of work, the more loans and mortgages will go unpaid. Your default rate will rise, and foreclosures will become inevitable.
We will sink deeper and deeper into a recession, until one day, we won't be able to climb out of it.

But for this, I am called a "pork barreler." I have no regrets.

I have no apologies.
Every piece of "pork" I bring home is at the expense of other national and state programs. This comes with seniority. And this, I believe, is my responsibility and duty as your United States Senator -- to look out for your interests, and wherever possible, to give Hawaii an added advantage and head start on the competition. I am proud to do it.

There are other times when I use my seniority to bring home something else -- something that money just can't buy

-- equal justice under law. The injustice committed against 120,000

Americans of Japanese ancestry during World War II, was a wrong that had to be made right.

On the day I was discharged from the military, I promised myself that I would one day correct this grave injustice.

Spark and I worked together, and it took nearly 30 years.
As ironic as it may seem, fighting for equal justice is not an easy task. It required both compromise and cooperation from our Congressional colleagues.
On August 10, 1988, President Reagan signed into law the Civil Liberties Act which extended a formal apology and provided compensatory payments to the Japanese-Americans interned unjustly during World War II.
From there, I went after the money -- $1.25 billion. It involved high-level cooperation, and calling in my "markers." The old phrase, "the check is in the mail," was just not good enough. The first redress payment was made on October 9, 1990.
In many ways, the challenges that lie ahead for the credit union industry are similar to the ones I face. We must never remain complacent, but always strive to improve our service.
During these troubled and uncertain times, we must continue to be guided by the 3 "C's" -- cooperation, compromise and commitment. Why mess with success?