SUGAR & MOLASSES.

1868 1868 CARLSBERG, JAN. 20, 1868. An exact and reliable statement of affairs in the Old World at the present moment, would be an easy matter if I were to confine myself to bare facts only. For instance, I might devise a neat little table, with a few columns on the left, put in the respective budgets for the last ten years (for comparison's sake), of the principal countries of Europe; their floating debts; the rapid growth of annual deficit with the ingenious methods to cover them the ever increasing taxation of the people, &c., etc.; then, writing on the right—say there'd it—Sadwa, Konigsberg, Mentana, German Unity, or Prussian agrarianism, (which), etc., etc., and lower down corresponding to the 31st of December, of my blessed year 1867, such words as—partial failure of the crops, severe winter, dreadful sufferings, trade prostrate, general discontent, but above all, that insidious foe of human happiness, which has pervaded all classes, and which makes a population restless, and then leave it to you to make out the balance sheet. But a serious political writer must not be satisfied with stating facts only. He wishes to impart to others his own appreciation of things, and of the consequences that may follow therefrom, he must enter into the discussion of the causes which have produced those facts, and then, by logic reasoning, lead his readers to the same conclusions he himself has come to. I am aware that prophetic politics are rarely worthy of the very slight attention they usually receive. Scarcely depends on individual lives, on latent or irresistible popular opinion, on those incidents which even statesmen in the despair of ignorance call "accidents," that the keenest observers are constantly at fault. Still, it is worth while sometimes to look around, to see, if we can, whether Europe is drifting. That it is in motion, is evident, and the point to be ascertained is whether the tide is carrying the nations.

EUROPEAN SITUATION.

term'd? Have late events shown him, that his star is on the wane, or disguised by the ingratitude and meanness of men has become indifferent? "Qu'en savez vous?" But so much has the Emperor done some time past a sort of fatality has attached itself to all his combinations and undertakings. It would be unjust, however, to burden him with the sole responsibility of these events. There is a powerful factor at the Tuileries, (whose head is the Emperor, the so-called "Spanish faction"), reactionary and bigoted, the same through whose influence the Mexican campaign had been decided upon, and who, short-sighted as they are, do not see that they are playing into the hands of the enemies of the Emperor's dynasty.

On the other hand there is the "war party" hardly less influential than the former, and whose name sufficiently indicates his tendencies. Without openly adopting the views of either of them, the Emperor has allowed himself to be influenced of late and has committed some mistakes, which his own better judgment might have averted.

I have said the French policy had been a double faced one in regard to Italy. The French troops left Rome on the 15th of September, 1866, in conformity with the Convention concluded between the Emperor and the King of Italy, and it was understood that henceforth the Pope should be left to his own resources. But what did really happen? The French General Dumas, by order of Marshal Niel, went to Rome to inspect the "Austrian Legion" in which desertions had become frequent. The General made a speech as if he had French troops before him, and inquiry being made as such. Upon this the Government at Florence made strong representations at Paris, declaring that the Convention of September had been without effect. Meanwhile the popular passions had been aroused in Italy, and Garibaldi made his well known march into the Papal States, there to meet at Mentana, not far from the doors of Rome, with his second Aspromonte. French divisions arrived just in time to save the Papal troops from defeat.

And so the French are at Rome again and the temporal power of the Pope has been granted a new lease of life. How long will it last, we may ask, has been gained? The Pope more than ever adverse to granting reforms in what is left to him of his patrimony. To all proposals of liberal and friendly advice, Cardinal Antonelli answers: "Non possumus!" The Vicar of Christ has his capital fortified by French engineers and garrisons, the "Petra Petre" in recruiting soldiers.

In the Kingdom of Italy, things go from bad to worse. The treasury is empty; the organization of the judicial system remains suspended; the Ministers without moral support; the political factions accuse each other of treachery or even treason; brigandage flourishes in every province; the southern provinces are overrun by the secret agents of King Francis, who praise the blessings of the old regime, and openly incite the people to resist the reforms of Garibaldi and Masini, Rome or death, and do all they can to increase the general confusion. In fact, the Emperor's policy is not unlike a ship with breakers ahead, and of whose crew, instead of working hard to save the craft, go so far as to pry and some to curse.

Ever bearing in mind, that France is a Catholic country and that the Emperor has necessarily to reckon with that powerful party, which represents the Catholicism of France, it is difficult to understand the real motives, which made him decide upon that second Roman expedition. Of course he could not allow any Circuit Court to set up before the capital, but he might (by a secret understanding with King Victor Emmanuel) have allowed the Italian army to cross the frontier, and his own troops to come up for the principle of nationalities. But his passive attitude as the occupying force of the Kingdom of Italy, and the fact that Prussia would overcome her enemies in such a short time, and so completely. He had hoped, after a long and to both parties equally ruinous struggle, to see the Emperor interpose as a supreme arbiter. Through he interposed at Nikolsburg, and stopped the Prussians before Vienna, he courted and invited the French to interpose. The North—mean the absorption of Hanover, Hesse-Cassel and Nassau—could be prevented Prussia from conquering military territory. He had not expected that the French might be said to have as far as foreign aggression was concerned, been neutral. At the splendid and unexpected success of the Prussians, the French who, until now, had been accustomed to consider themselves the first military nation of the world, became alarmed and jealous. The French diplomacy thought the moment favorable one for demanding at Berlin, territorial compensation for the services rendered by France in the war of 1870. The peremptory rejection of that demand by Count Bismarck, and the storm of indignation it aroused throughout Germany, made Mr. Drouyn de Lohas resign, and Napoleon III. was forced to resign. The Emperor's enemies have taken good care to keep open.

If war did not break out when it was mainly owing to the efforts of Lord Stanley, I think I am safe, when I say that both France and Prussia were glad enough for having a pretext not to come to blows. The first, because England must sooner or later be forced into it in spite of herself, and her position would be an awkward one. Besides the opening of the Exhibition drew near, and the mighty interests engaged in that enterprise could not be discarded.

It was during that magnificent display of human ingenuity and enterprise, that two events occurred, which, if they had not occurred, and at once destroyed the expectations of those, who from the gathering of so many Sovereigns and their personal inter-est in the success of the Exposition, had a good understanding among them. On the 6th of June, the Pole, Berezowski, fired upon the Emperor Alexander in the Bois de Boulogne. The cursed deed of a single miscreant brought the old Russian party into power again. Russia became estranged to France and with more fervor than ever is following now its traditional policy.

On the first of July, at the very moment when the Emperor Napoleon was distributing the prizes, the news arrived that Maximilian, who had abandoned to his own resources, had been shot on the 19th of June at Queretaro.

That was the greatest defeat the Empire has ever known, and the impression of it on such a sensitive people, as the French are, could not be but very deep and galling. All the sacrifices in men and money had been made, and now the Emperor was reminded of the moral obligation imposed upon the French Government to indemnify somehow the bondholders of the Mexican loan, whom they had encouraged to subscribe.

Soon another cause for inquietude came from the South. Garibaldi, the great patriot and soldier but poor politician, thought the moment propitious for solving the Roman question—that Gordian knot of modern times—by the sword. This fresh complication of Italian affairs was owing partly to the intrigues of the party of action, who know but too well how to make capital out of the infatuation of their countrymen, partly also to the fact that the Emperor, who had not been acknowledged, to the double faced policy of the French.

It would be as well to remark here, that for some time past the Emperor's policy has changed his real friends and encouraged his enemies. The boldest, which before had characterized so much the man and his actions, seems to have been given place to vacillation and irresolution. In it, that age and infirmity have broken the elasticity of that man.

point out to you one fact more, which alone would be sufficient to define the present political situation of Europe. The colossal and general armaments which take place everywhere, are the immediate consequence of the Prussian victories, as almost every country on the continent thinks itself under the necessity of adopting the Prussian military system and to exchange the ordinary rifle for the dreaded needle-gun or some other breech loader. And what if the unhappy idea should gain strength, that the newly organized armies organized to prove the efficiency of the different systems of arms which they have adopted?

"Si se parum, para bellum," it is said! But such a peace establishment would absorb the whole of the resources of a country, and could not by any means sustain itself for any length of time. But peace or war, one thing is certain and inevitable if complete change does not take place soon, and that is: a general bankruptcy!

I grieve to say that the future I have drawn is a gloomy one. I shall be happy indeed, if in my next, I can give you more cheerful news. E. H.

Approved this 13th day of May, 1868. KAMEHAMEHA R.

LIBEL AND WRECKERS.—The wrecking party of the second expedition to Wake's Island, returned by the British brig Clio last month. They sailed from Honolulu last September, in the schooner Mot Wahine, and landed on Wake's Island, after a passage down the coast of the main, Capt. English, Mr. Theo. Foster and nine Hawaiian divers were taken, with a part of their stores, and apparatus for distilling water. The next day, towards night, the wind shifting, the schooner took her anchor and put out to sea, to avoid a lee shore. The vessel was never seen again afterwards. The wind on the third day veered suddenly to the westward, and blew a living gale. On the island its force was terrific, trees on the windward side were torn up, and carried quill across the lagoon and branches strewn the whole island. Captain Zenas Bent, the mate Mr. White, and seven Hawaiian seamen perished with the schooner. The weather at Wake's Island during the five months that the party were there, with the exception of the typhoon—Thursday—was pleasant and fair. The lagoon abounds with fish, and from the middle of February, the birds made their appearance, and there was plenty of eggs. On these natural resources of the island the wreckers managed to live without serious inconvenience, while by distillation they procured as much water as they required. Their wrecking was finished many weeks ere a chance to leave the island was offered. Through it lies in the track of the China bound vessels, it is incorrectly laid down, and therefore give it a wide berth, especially when passed on the windward side. During the four months, only one vessel was communicated with—a brig that touched within two weeks after the party landed, and before they had given up hope for the return of their schooner. Several sail were seen at intervals, but they passed on without noticing the island, or the signals on the shore. As length the Clio appeared, bound thither for wrecking purposes, not being aware that the Honolulu party were there. Near the island the Clio spoke a bark, which was probably the vessel which had agreed, when leaving Honolulu for China, to touch at the island and report upon the fate of the party, for whose safety, on account of long absence, serious fears were entertained here. The Clio was chartered for Honolulu, and taking on board the party, the quicksaver and other material of the wrecked Libelle, arrived after a pleasant run of thirty days.
