unpardonable insult to the nation—Mr. W. said that there were several opinions on the question, some approved of a reconsideration of the resolution, others only wished a disapproval of Mr. Whitney's course.
Such a vote disapproved of the resolution. He thought that Mr. Whitney deserved a reprimand from the House. It was notorious that he was quick to publish bad things of the Government, but slow to admit that in anything he was wrong. No one here would deny that the King had been ill-used. He thought that the resolution was too far, and he should vote against it, but in favor of a reconsideration of the matter.

Mr. C. H. Judd thought that the matter was somewhat mixed, but he would not vote against reconsideration, if by such a vote it could be ascertained that he was in favor of the resolution. He thought that the use of the word "Hospitiaman" would affect his reputation as a man. He objected to the word and thought that Mr. Whitney had no right to call any man such names.

Mr. Kaka-nua moved to have the question disposed of.
Mr. Hittchcock moved to indefinitely postpone.
His Ex. C. de Varigny withdrew his motion for reconsideration of the resolution. He thought that the resolution was in favor of the King, and he would support it. He his reign would have been short. It was a matter of great importance that our main facilities should be regular and prompt. If the money was put upon waste it would cost only a few, while a steamer would be beneficial to the whole country. For these reasons he supported the bill.

Mr. Kaka-nua said that until the argument of the Attorney-General was brought forward, he had supposed that something new was to be said, but he had heard nothing new yet. Perhaps some advantages would accrue to the country, but it was not right to give that much company $50,000. The capital of the steam company was fourteen times the income of the Government for the biennial period. He thought it was not right to give that much
thought it was not right to give that much

Mr. Kaka-nua thought that those who had spoken were only talking in their own interests, and not representing the people, and should not be taken into account. He thought that the Nobles was very fair. The bill was very good, and its provisions were reasonable. The member for South Kona yesterday had shown that he knew nothing of the terms of the bill, he read a long article from the Gazette of May 27th, concerning the swift transmission of the news of the shooting of H. R. H.
Prince Alfred. He thought that the terms of the petition presented yesterday were reasonable against the Government. We ought to assist those to whom we are indebted. If the Missionaries who came here to teach us had had nothing to do with the bill, we would have to have saved the souls of some who died of old age while they were coming around Cape Horn. The promoters of the bill were the wise and good.

Mr. Rhodes said that he agreed with a good deal of both sides, but he had a few amendments to propose. He thought that the rates of taxation in this country and America had nothing to do with the bill, and he would like to have the bill amended so that we would receive a return for the subsidy. If the question of taxation was to be raised, he would merely say that the taxes of the United States were higher than those of this country. All knew that the rates of taxation in this country were higher than those of the United States. Steam lines were great helps to the friendship of the world. These facts could not be controverted.
