Local Affairs. An immense pavilion is in process of construction covering nearly the entire extent of Union Square for the accommodation of articles to be exhibited at the forthcoming August Fair.

Mr. Mark Twain is in the city for several weeks, engaged, it is said, in writing a book. This book he intends to publish in New York city; but being somewhat of a prodigy, it is extremely doubtful if he has the means to compass the project without making another "raise."

Our Public Libraries. The Alta had an article on this subject a few days ago, in which it places the number of volumes in the Mercantile, Mechanics' and Odd Fellows' Libraries at 52,000 volumes.

Public Park. The city fathers are discussing the propriety of detaching a thousand acres of land or so belonging to the city, and situated just "ayant" its limits, to the use of a public park.

Parapsycho. People are never so happy as when genteelly humbugged. We have had in this city, for several past years, an excellent opera troupe, which was, in the end, literally starved out, and took vessel for Australia.

A FUNNY CASE. A very amusing case was brought before a justice of New Albany, Ind., recently. The Ledger reports it in the following happy style: Adam Reinhardt, an old German, over whose head the frosts of about 70 winters have passed, was arrested by officer Sandford, charged with stealing a hen from Mary Bowen.

USE OF MONOCHROMATIC LIGHT AS A MEANS OF DETECTING DISEASE.—Photographers, says a writer in the Standard, are endeavoring to make use of various kinds of light, have often alluded to the curious properties of monochromatic rays.

SCIENTIFIC.—We (Athenaeum) are informed that "predictive meteorology" is likely to be accepted as a fact by observers of natural phenomena, and that intelligent persons may become weatherwise by the use of a thermometer, as is declared by Mr. Brumham, in a paper read before the Meteorological Society.

At the meeting of the Board of Health last week, a resolution was passed to secure the services of a Physician, whose special business it should be to travel about the islands under direction of the Board, to visit the leper settlement, to attend the sick, to gather information respecting the sanitary condition of the Hawaiian people, and in a medical way to do such service as opportunities and circumstances may call for.

One of the most urgent questions of the day is that relating to the sanitary condition of the nation and the consideration of measures which shall secure the bodily health and the preservation of the people.

Not only is the lack of popular knowledge of hygienic and curative processes suited to simple disorders, a fruitful cause of danger to health and life; but so also is the scarcity of medical practitioners throughout the sparsely settled districts, to whom the people may apply when attacked with serious diseases.

It would be an excellent thing if a Physician could be located in every district throughout the islands, and every indigent held out to the people, to avail themselves of his services, so that by gratuitous and easy access, they might learn to appreciate the importance of proper treatment when sick.

The multiplication of chances for application to properly educated medical men, and successful cures often accomplished, would in time undermine that miserable belief in native Kahuna and superstitious medical practice, which in the hands of charlatans, is now responsible for so many unnecessary deaths.

But the resources of the government are not adequate to locating in every district competent physicians, and the sparsely settled country cannot offer inducements to medical men to settle, with the hope of profitable business.

Whatever is done, must aim at supplying deficiencies in an inexpensive way, and be so distributed that all may equally benefit by what is done.

The Sanitary Committee of the Assembly fully impressed with the importance of the work committed to the care of the Board, not only commended its action, by segregating the lepers to prevent the further spread of leprosy among the people, but advised and recommended a large appropriation, so that the sanitary and curative measures deemed advisable for the welfare of the people, might be successfully put into operation.

The locating of medicines at various places for gratuitous distribution has been practiced with excellent results for some years past, and wherever suitable agents could be found, or persons have offered to take this benevolent task upon themselves, the Board has supplied them with the simpler drugs.

The timely and urgent advice of a physician in recommending a removal to the hospital at Honolulu, where he may find on the other islands persons suffering under protracted complaints, must tend to assist the benefits of that institution and extend the efforts undertaken by the trustees to make it popular with all the Hawaiians.

California has just given the world another proof of her resources and vigor, but this time, mines and farming, railroads and bulk-heads, are for the nonce forgotten, and the youthful State bids boldly for a high rank in periodical literature, and it must be conceded with very fair pretensions, judging from the specimen now before us.

The writer sits down to pen a story or a descriptive sketch for publication to the world, he depends upon his imagination to embellish and render attractive the work of his brain; but when one undertakes to describe the life and condition, past and present, of a nation, something more than imagination, or vague reports of what "they say"—sailor's yarns and Manchus tales—is necessary in order to state the truth and escape the implication of being a libeller of a whole people.

The writer's first tentative states as a fact that which is well known to be untrue: "The people of the Hawaiian Islands used to eat each other," and stirring from this assumption of fact, he proceeds to give the reins to his imagination, as he himself confesses, and paints a horrid picture of the former life and character of the Hawaiian people.

But we took up our pen to refer particularly to one article in the Overland, about which we have a right to speak—that entitled "Hawaiian Civilization." When a writer sits down to pen a story or a descriptive sketch for publication to the world, he depends upon his imagination to embellish and render attractive the work of his brain; but when one undertakes to describe the life and condition, past and present, of a nation, something more than imagination, or vague reports of what "they say"—sailor's yarns and Manchus tales—is necessary in order to state the truth and escape the implication of being a libeller of a whole people.

barbarians, is unquestionable, but that, taking into consideration all the different circumstances of climate, position and race, they were any worse savages than the ancient Britons, may fairly be doubted.

As to the charge of cannibalism, it is perhaps sufficient to say that there has never been found one word of tradition or a single allusion in any of the ancient metes, or historical songs, of the existence, at any period, of this practice among the Hawaiians.

In the opening article of the Overland, entitled "A Breeze from the Woods," a very readable sketch of a trip to the sea-side, the writer lets his imagination take wings in the following style, while looking over the ocean in our direction: "The palms lift up their 'fronded' heads just over there, and the cocconut drops down as from an opening heaven—more is the shame that those frowly, low-browed cannibals are not content therewith, but also give such information and direction regarding the dispensing of the medicines, as will materially assist those who have them in charge."

But we have not space to devote to a lengthy review of "Hawaiian Civilization." After industriously abusing the King, the government, the people and the missionaries, in all of whose coats the writer picks some grievous holes after having "dinned with faint praise," he winds up his singular mélange of distorted facts by denouncing the proposed reciprocity treaty as being likely to result to our exclusive benefit and to the loss of revenue of the States, and advocating annexation as the only measure that can bring us prosperity and "insure a tendency to a complete civilization of the native people!"

All of a sudden, the Japanese have become a migratory people. By the hundreds and thousands they are fleeing from one port to another, to escape the consequences of an impending war. The retainers of the Tokugawa family fled, by sea principally, from Yedo and its vicinity, to their own provinces north and south of that capital; and the retainers of Satsuma, Chosa, and Toza, came from all quarters to Yedo, in war steamers, in chartered vessels, and in their own junka.

Foreign Relations of Japan. These were from the beginning forced and unwelcome to the rulers of that country. To the merchants and tradespeople in all the open ports, they have generally been sources of profit. To the laborers, but a small advantage has accrued, considering the higher prices of food since foreign commerce has been opened up with Japan.

And why did they prevent it? My readers, I answer, knowingly, simply because the Foreign Ministers, (I will except the French, not knowing what stand he took, but all the rest), intimated and suggested to the Governor of Yokohama that there were undeveloped resources sufficient to keep all the laboring population in Japan employed at home; that there was no necessity to permit them to go to the Hawaiian Islands, that far-off, unknown country. This, and like twaddle, was a specimen of their neutrality (!) in the affairs of Japan, as well as a token of their statesmanship in directing that troubled nation.

There are undeveloped resources in Japan which might employ all her people, but there is neither knowledge, nor willingness to attempt their development at present. And this the Grand-dames of Ambassadors must certainly see; but they are all anxious to have a cup of tea at the expense of Japan, and being a very self-satisfied party, they are watching that tea kettle boil, and just when it is at the point to boil over, they will get a sniff of its fragrance, they clap on the lid! They had better remember the pot is not a lid, and that "the tempt within" may break it, and they lose their labor and tea, besides getting their fingers burned.

her part of the contract with these people, and you may have it all you want." It was one of the old fogie Meadames who instructed the local Government to demand such an unheard-of guarantee. Let Hawaii urge her own treaty relations with Japan, and her position as neighbor, her necessity of friendly intercourse, and her lack of conflicting interests will make them firm friends and allies, and inaugurate an international policy which will better both nations.

During the long months that we watched the progress of the revolution, throwing down one power, and establishing an older one, there came to the heart of the Christian philanthropist an occasional gleam of hope that the Mico's Government saw the right path, and were about to step in it, and perhaps continue there. But how evanescent such hope, when we reflected who were the counsellors and advisers of this struggling Government, so far as it received any advice from foreign Ambassadors.

The foreign policy is as ruinous to the best interests of all classes of people in that land as is their own internal government, because both are based upon what are considered the present interests of the ruling class. The Tycoon permitted no ports to be opened to foreign commerce out of his own territories. The consequence was, he had more expense to incur than profit, in supplying the necessary conveniences and protection for commerce, besides all the jealousy of opposing Daimios, who were prevented from sharing the supposed profits of foreign traffic.

All of a sudden, the Japanese have become a migratory people. By the hundreds and thousands they are fleeing from one port to another, to escape the consequences of an impending war. A few hours before the sailing of the steamer Honolulu last Wednesday, fire was discovered to have broken out among some bales of pulu, which were stowed in the fore hold of the ship. The pulu, of which there were two hundred and sixty-two bales to be shipped, was being put on board, when the hands stopped work for breakfast, at which time though the hatch was up, there was no sign of fire, but on "turning to" again, smoke was seen rising from the hatch, and found to proceed from three bales which were on the upper tier of the cargo. The danger was soon overcome, without damage beyond a few pounds of pulu, burnt in the bales where the fire originated.

Although very certain, that no fire remained after the three bales had been put off the ship, yet the uncertainty as to how the fire originated, and the feeling of insecurity with keeping on board any cargo, in which fire had been discovered, with the unpleasant apprehension which must be excited among the many passengers engaged for the voyage, by the ship leaving so shortly after the accident with any pulu still remaining on board, determined Capt. Connor to put ashore, what was already stowed down, and leave the whole shipment behind. By the order of the American Consul, Capt. Meek, Robinson and D. Foster, were requested to survey the cargo, and to report the damage done, and also their opinion on the cause of the fire and the advisability of the steamer proceeding to sea, with any pulu on board. Without being able satisfactorily to themselves, to account for the origin of the fire, but naming the only two probable means, that of a spark from without, or heat from within, they sustained Capt. Connor's opinion, that under the circumstances, the refusal to take any pulu, on the present voyage was justifiable and proper.

The shippers, although damaged by the disappointment, acquiesced in the decision as correct, and find no fault, that for the sake of the passengers and that of the Captain not to assume responsibility for possible accident, their pulu must remain over for future transportation.

The accident has given rise to some discussion as to the liability of baled pulu, to ignite from its own heat. There is no end to the possibilities which may happen, if we give our fancy scope when searching for causes. We may find spontaneous combustion, a plausible reason, if other causes are not apparent, not only for the burning of a bale of pulu, but the body of a toper. The pulu on board the Honolulu did not ignite from itself, we infer from the fact that the bales were burned, as if the fire originated from without instead of within, only a very little of the pulu was burned, whereas if it had ignited from internal heat the whole mass would have been in combustion and the burlaps burned in many places.

The pulu was in a dry and good commercial condition. An examination of other bales, showed no heat existed in them. The pulu has been returned to the storehouse, and no further fire has shown itself in it, and but for the accident on the steamer nobody would have conjectured that it was liable to spontaneous combustion, no more than so many piles of lumber.

Very moist pulu, has many times made the voyage to San Francisco without exciting alarm from heating, many thousand pounds of it in a wet condition, have been stored in a packing house, and remained for days, without overheating; in all its manipulation on these islands these fifteen years past, and transportation across the ocean, it has not suggested to those engaged in the business, that it is liable to spontaneous combustion, neither do we believe it is so liable, under hardly any circumstances. It would falsely to the past experience of years, to give it now from a single accident, this dangerous quality. That it is combustible and easily set on fire is very true, but to be shipped, well baled and covered with burlaps, is not so dangerous as many goods that get along under ordinary insurance rates, and have not excited the fears of either shippers or owners.

The accident may have happened from a stray spark from some smoker, or stack pipe. The bales lay at the leeward side of the wharf, and from being some hours there in the sun, were dry and sun heated, and the probability that the fire was communicated from without, is much more convincing than that it originated in the pulu itself.

EARTHQUAKE WAVES ON THE PACIFIC.—The Bulletin records the transmission of the earthquake wave of April 23 to the Coast as having taken place in five hours. This would give a speed of 495 miles to the hour. The height of the wave at Kau has been variously estimated at from 35 to 40 feet.

An earthquake wave, which followed the recent eruption in the Sandwich Islands, was transmitted to this Coast and recorded on the government self-registering tide gauges at San Diego, San Francisco and Astoria, in about five hours. On the 25th of December, 1854, a similar wave was transmitted from the coast of Japan to the Golden Gate in 12 hours and 38 minutes. It will be recalled that this earthquake wave caused the wreck of the Russian frigate Diana, in the port of Simoda, and great loss of life.

These facts, which are derived from the best authority, convey a very impressive idea of the tremendous power required to disturb the whole body of an ocean, for a distance of 2,000 to 5,000 miles, by a movement distinct from its ordinary tidal swing. It will be seen that the revolution of the great tidal wave at Hawaii, reached the coast, distant over 2,000 miles in five hours, and was observed along a stretch of shore over thirteen geographical degrees in length.

THE H. M. STEAM PACKET COMPANY.—We observe by a notice of the Secretary of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, that on and after the 2nd inst., the steamers of the line will run from Southampton to Aspinwall, thus conveying passengers through without change, and saving freight from the damage of the extra handling required to have it transferred from one ship to another. It has taken the company a good while to see that this change should be made, but we may be thankful that they should be able to see it now, however late in the day. It is fully time now, that the old intercolonial ships running to Japan, should be placed on some less frequented route.
