The Oakland Disaster.

On the 4th of July afternoon, the moveable end of the pier, at Oakland Ferry, broke and precipitated about 150 persons into the bay. Twenty persons were drowned.

When the train from Oakland arrived at the end of the pier, the passengers from this city by the El Capitan had been safely landed and were waiting.

The platform is hung at the other end by chains instead of being held on steel floats, as is sometimes the case.

When the boat arrived, at the time of the accident, and had discharged her freight and passengers, the people from Oakland, including the Garibaldians who had participated in the celebration, then commenced going on board across the staging at the side.
