Prescott's Life and Works.

[From the Review in Westminster.] A few years ago, one of the men who has most contributed to mark the place of the American nation in the literary movement of the 19th century, was suddenly taken away by an untimely death. WILLIAM H. PRESCOTT, the eminent historian, died in Boston on the 28th of January, 1859, in the full vigor of his talents, abruptly interrupted in the course of his most important works. He was achieving a fame extending far beyond the limits of his own country, by works of the highest character, which have become popular also in foreign lands; yet very little was known of him personally, or of the efforts through which he had gained his reputation. Some were acquainted with the many obstacles thrown in his way by his feeble health, and his almost absolute state of blindness. In the preface to one of his principal books, he had discreetly told the reader of some of his difficulties and sufferings; but these few lines, impressed with a melancholy resignation, had so far, been the only revelation to the general reader, when George Ticknor, of Boston, published his most interesting book, "The Life of Prescott." Written by a hand which seems still shaky with sympathetic emotion and grief, the narrative comprises the whole life of Prescott, from the first months of his infancy to the very day of his death.

The great interest that one feels in perusing the book is owing to the abundance of details having the charm and stamp of truth, added to the infinite care with which a friend sets forth the qualities of a friend, and above all, to the character of affection animating all the pages devoted to the history of a simple, noble, and painful existence.

The great attraction in Prescott's life is not derived from exciting scenes, or unexpected events, but from the courageous simplicity with which he devoted his existence to study, and died a martyr to his chosen calling. We have thought that something touching and instructive is taught by his in-doubtable energy in his infirmities; by the analysis of his habitual processes of composition; and also from the example of his pure and noble nature.

William Hickling Prescott was born in Salem, on the 4th of May, 1796. His father, Judges Prescott, who, in later years, became a Judge in Boston, was a distinguished lawyer, and his mother, Catherine Hickling, was the daughter of a merchant of Massachusetts. The Prescott family is proud of belonging to the 16th century, to those glorious settlers of their country to their faith, and to the deserted shores of the New World, to find there a new home, and religious liberty of conscience. The first among them were the historian's ancestors—energetic and intelligent men, who exercised a great influence on the destinies of the infant colony.

Young William was fond of listening to the great deeds of his forefathers, and to the part which his grandfather had taken in the war of American Independence, and he used to look with admiration at the sword which was worn at the glorious battle of Bunker Hill. It is not unlikely that he preserved, from those early remembrances, his great taste for relating heroic actions and noble deeds of warfare. The romances of the old times of chivalry were among his favorite books. He embraced in his youth a great aversion to any kind of exertion, and a great propensity to idleness and dissipation. Even his admission to Harvard University did not alter his indolent habits. It appears that he was not able even, to resist the temptations that were crowding in his way. His biographer informs us that it was the most dangerous period of his life, and that he used to think of it, in after years, with sorrow and regret. A terrible accident, which was to have on his future a sad and considerable influence, suddenly changed the course of his life. While playing with his comrades, a piece of bread, thrown with violence by one of them, struck him in the eye. This unfortunate blow was the cause of an inflammation by which his life was endangered, and when he recovered, his eye was entirely lost. The long, weary weeks through which he passed in darkness and silence, were favorable to sound reflection, and he came out of his long rest with the firm determination to make up, by assiduous work, for the behavior of his former years. This was, thank to his remarkable faculties, a very easy task, and when he had finished his University studies, he had the glorious honor of reading in public a Latin poem composed by himself, and dedicated to "Hope." This poem was lost, and he was never able to find it amongst his college copy-books or papers.

Hope was indeed smiling on him at that time, when, after a brilliant success, and enjoying recovered health, he left Harvard University. He was then 19, and he began the study of law, under his father's direction.
Two years had elapsed since his accident, and he was led to believe that the result would never be serious, but his illusion did not last long. A slight imprudence brought back the terrible inflammation which had already endangered his life, and when, after three months suffering and excruciating pain, he was allowed to emerge from darkness, his remaining eye was in such a bad condition that he could hardly see to read one page, or write a letter. He spent one winter in the Azores, traveled in France, England and Italy, and tried the most skillful surgeons of London and Paris, but all without avail. When he came back to Boston, after two years' absence, he brought back the same pains, and was obliged to follow the same prescriptions. Great was the disappointment of his poor mother, who had prepared for her beloved son a nice room, adorned with beautiful, bright tapestries.
The sight of those lovely colors caused him intolerable pain, and they were obliged to paint the walls green, and to cover the furniture with sombre cloth. It would have been well enough if those prescriptions had been sufficient, but he was obliged to regulate his life as if he had been a blind man, or, at least, as a man who ought to spare his eyesight as much as possible.

These first years of Prescott's youth were the hardest of his life, but he found a great consolation and encouragement in the vigilant affection of his sister. It has been remarked by a great critic that most of the men who have distinguished themselves in after years, had in their youth, as an intelligent and devoted companion, a good and kind sister, showing, in a smaller way, the same aptitudes and genius as their brothers.
During these painful days, Prescott was fortunate enough to have his sister Elizabeth Prescott as a companion and confidant. Entertaining for her brother the most unbounded admiration, she deemed herself very happy to be his reader and secretary. Brother and sister used to shut themselves up in the library for days, and while Prescott, his back to the light, listened attentively, the indefatigable Elizabeth would read for six or seven hours, historical or poetical works, with the help of that discreet companion, Prescott grew bold enough to send an article which he had composed, to the director of one of the most renowned periodicals of the United States. More than two weeks passed without bringing any bad news, and our two conspirators were already sure of success, and Elizabeth was already fancying that she was seeing the nimbus of immortality round the great writer's head, when, alas! one day the manuscript was sent back, with a pitiless refusal. Prescott endured the shameful blow with philosophy, but Elizabeth was indignant for many a day.

Reputed in that quarter, Prescott tried another. He started, in association with a few young friends, under the name of the "Club Review," the publication of a series of articles, which appeared at irregular intervals.
The first number appeared in February, 1830, but the publication as he himself says pleasantly, "was stopped at the fourth number for want of subscribers." It must be confessed that it was not Prescott's fault. He had written for the Review three articles, two of which were novels—one of the sentimental, and the other of the historical kind.

After these successive disappointments, Prescott grew somewhat discouraged. He was then twenty-four years of age, and the bad condition of his sight prevented him from following his father's vocation. He would have born his infirmity well enough if his family, who were desirous of finding employment for him, had not always been interfering with his own ideas. They wanted the future historian to be a shopkeeper. He happily met at that time in the society of Boston, a young girl named Susan Armony, who had some years before inherited a large fortune from her father, a very wealthy merchant. He fell in love with her graceful person, and they were married some months later. Thanks to that good fortune, Prescott not only became independent as far as money was concerned, but also a happy man, for Susan Armony was a devoted wife to him to the very last day of his life. Under these new circumstances, Prescott's parents, seeing his future safe and secure, left him free to follow his own inclination, and he resolved to become one of the illustrious writers of his country. As soon as he had taken that resolution, it became the fixed idea of his life, and he worked accordingly. We shall see how conscientiously he prepared himself for his noble profession he had chosen. Poet laureate of the University of Harvard, he could believe that his education there, as far as the classics and English literature were concerned, was a sufficient stock to start with, and that he did not need any new initiation. But he had a different opinion of the case, and under the date of October 30th, 1821, he made an entry in his journal and wrote a programme of studies, including grammar, English and Latin literature. He had the perseverance to adhere to it literally, and he was soon compiling, as a young scholar, the books of rhetoric used in the Universities. That task being accomplished, he then turned his attention to foreign languages, comprising besides the French and Italian literatures, with which he was partially acquainted, the German literature, which he was not conversant with.
"This will be sufficient," he modestly said, "as a general preparation." The Spanish language, which was to be some time later the main occupation of his life, was not then included in his programme. He spent one year reading the French authors, from Froisart to Chateaubriand, and one year also in the study of Italian works. Having mastered Italian, he undertook the study of German, but his will, strong as it was, failed him in presence of that different language. So far, he had been able with the assistance of a Secretary, to achieve his great undertakings without much fatigue to his eyes, but it could not be so with the German. The first condition required was to get accustomed to the gothic characters so completely unknown to him, and his eyesight was not strong enough to resist the efforts imposed upon it. After a few months of vain attempts he gave it up, but it was not without a deep feeling of regret and sadness. For the first time he was made aware that his infirmity was not only an inconvenience, but also a real obstacle, and he had a tangible proof of insurmountable difficulties that his will itself could not conquer. After that failure he sunk into a profound discouragement which caused a great neglect of his daily labors. Mr. Ticknor now intervened and caused him to shake off his melancholy, and he showed his friend what was the course he had better pursue, and so brought him into the road that was to lead him so rapidly to fame and celebrity.

OBSERVATIONS BY JOHN BELLING.—If a man wants to get at his actual distance, let him visit a grave yard.

If any man wants to be an old bachelor, and get sick at a boarding tavern, and have a back room in the fourth story, and a red-haired chamber-maid bring his water gravel to him in a tin wash-basin, I have always said, and I stick to it, he has got a perfect right to do it.

When a man loses his health, then he first begins to take care of it. It is a good judgment, that is!

It is getting so now-a-days, if a man can't cheat in some way, he isn't happy.

Success in life is apt to make us forget the time we wasn't much. It is so with the frog on the jump; he can't remember that he was a tadpole—but other folks can.

As individuals, few be a fine gentleman, has either got to be born so or be brought up in it from infancy; he can't learn it suddenly any more than he can learn to talk in his mother tongue by practicing on the tommyhawk.

THE STONEWALL.—The Fall Mail Gazette

Explains the manner of how this ship got to sea despite the French authorities.
It will be remembered that the six vessels boiled for the Confederates, the Stone-wall was the only one which escaped the vigilance of the French Government and the American Minister and was sent to the States.
Maitre Lecan explained how this was effected, and expatiated that most incoherent of shipbuilders, M. Arman. When the French Government refused to allow guns to be placed on board his vessel, Captain Bullock proposed to M. Arman that they should be hoisted to a third power.
Denmark, then at war with Prussia, was in want of a "ram," and proposed to purchase the Stone-wall, but to blind the Francophile authorities a treaty of sale was signed with the master of the King's house in the kingdom of Sweden! Mr. Dayton still suspicious, wrote to Sweden for information, and the purchase of the vessel was denied by Count Manderstroom. The American Minister informed M. Drouin de Lancy that the purchase by Denmark was almost betrayed.
After a great deal of bother the Stone-wall, or Stone-Kooper, as she then was, got under way with a French crew on board, and reached Copenhagen. The French crew returned home. Denmark no longer required the "ram," and asked for a reduction of 412, 000, which M. Arman would not make, and demanded payment in full or that the contract should be annulled. The contract was annulled, and just then Captain Bullock appeared and claimed the purchase of the
"ram," and asked for a reduction of 412, 000, which M. Arman would not make, and

His HIGHERNESS M. KIKUKAHOA, remaining in the same condition without any marked abatement of his paralysis. For three days of the week he suffered a severe attack of the parotid glands, which impeded deglutition and deprived him of sleep. This inflammation, about which serious fears were entertained, has now subsided.

The arrival of the foreign mails places us once more in contact with the affairs of the world. The Congress of the United States, adjourned to Sept. 3d, will assemble but not much business will be transacted until the regular session in December. The subject of Reciprocity with Canada is likely to be again brought forward, as Secretary Seward has informed Congress that he has entered into negotiations with the British Minister Thornton for a new Reciprocity Treaty with that country. A new treaty forms the basis for the negotiations, which will soon be in a condition for transmission to the Imperial and Canadian Governments. It is expected that the treaty will be executed in time for ratification by the Senate at the December meeting of Congress.

Upon the advisability of such a treaty, the British Colonies says that Canada has learned to do without it, and that the advantage is mostly with the United States, but that, in the event of a new treaty, British Columbia must be included.

The State elections, considered to be indicative of the prospects of the parties in the coming Presidential election, have occurred in Vermont and Maine—the former always a Republican, and the latter, until late years, a Democratic State. The Republican majority in Vermont is largely increased—a heavy vote being polled than at any election since 1849. The majority claimed is 30,000. The majority, rather than the result, is the theme of comment in the papers. The Tribune declares it a Fort Sumpter affair, the presence of the great battle in November; the World that it is about equivalent to the "Dutch taking Holland." Maine has also elected the Republican ticket by a large majority, and is considered therefore safe for Grant and Colfax. The excitement and strife of the Presidential campaign is fairly under way. In the South, there will be bitter deeds as well as bitter words. The telegrams announce that lawless and hostile organizations abound throughout the country, and that the political strife is already fraught in deeds of violence and bloodshed.

The Chinese Embassy have been visiting various parts of the country—Astoria, the home of Mr. Seward; Buffalo, Boston, Lowell and other manufacturing towns. Their political mission has resulted in a treaty considered favorable to China, and conferring on citizens of the United States valuable privileges of trade and residence in China. They sailed for Europe on the 9th of September, where they hope to negotiate favorable treaties with the European Powers.

The value of the commerce of the Pacific, and the efforts among capitalists of various nationalities to be beforehand in securing its control, is shown in the frequent allusions to the transit routes believed to be favorable to carriage between the two oceans. The franchise of the Panama route was warmly bid for by American and English capitalists, and secured by the former at an enormous price of purchase money, and a heavy annual tax.

The English have organized a company to build a road across Honduras, and have secured valuable franchises from that Government, and the shares have already been placed upon the market. Nicaragua is already a transit route, and the rights and protection of those interested are still further guaranteed by the treaty just ratified, in which Nicaragua grants to United States citizens and property the right of transit across the Isthmus, on any route of communication, natural or artificial, by land or water, which may now or hereafter be constructed under the authority of Nicaragua; to be used and enjoyed in the same manner, and on equal terms, by both Republics. Nicaragua, however, reserving its right of sovereignty over the same.

Preparations for the coming Parliamentary elections are in progress throughout Great Britain. The candidates are appealing to their constituencies, and declaring their position on the test question of the day—the Irish Church Establishment. This question will be so distinctly marked in the canvass, that the new members will consider their votes pledged to the one side or the other, and hence there will be a more compact, reliable and uncompromising party for Mr. Gladstone to work with—if the Liberals gain an increase of members. The policy may be considered as virtually settled, when the returns shall have been made. There will be no middle ground on the Church question, and no more Adullamites in the new Parliament. The Liberals confidently expect a majority, and the settlement of a policy adverse to the continuance of the Irish Church, but do not feel so certain that the Government will be displaced. The course pursued on the Reform Bill will be that likely to happen on the Church question. Mr. Disraeli will declare that it is inevitable, and assume it as a Government measure, and so evade the force of his adversaries' attack.

At a meeting of the Tory party, at the Crystal Palace, resolutions were adopted expressing the determination of the party to support the Church, Throne and Constitution. Mr. Bright lays down his principles in an address to the electors of Birmingham. In it he explains the defects of the late Reform Bill; reviews the question of suffrage, and repeats his desire for such extension of franchise as will call into exercise the more enlightened intelligence of the country. He denounces the principle of three-cornered constitutions, as applied to Birmingham; and believes the disfranchisement and dismemberment of the Irish Church would strengthen the cause of Christianity and the Constitution of the country.

Mr. Gladstone is said to be making a political bargain, as the rumor runs in English political circles, that an understanding has been arrived at between him and the Roman Catholic Bishops of Ireland. When the dis-establishment of the Irish Protestant Church is sanctioned by Parliament, he will be prepared to recommend a grant of £1,000,000 to the Maynooth College as a compensation for the abolition of the annual grant. This sum will be produced by the sale of an adequate portion of the landed estates of the Protestant Church.

The new Parliament will meet on the 10th of December, and the Queen's Speech will be delivered on the 14th. The Duke of Edinburgh will sail from England in October, in his flag-ship, to visit the Pacific Ocean, and finish the tour so abruptly interrupted at Sydney. The Prince will visit Honolulu.

The war in Paraguay seems no nearer a termination than when it commenced, nearly three years ago. The fortress of Humaita has been evacuated by Lopez, more, it appears, through military reasons than the prowess of the allies. The garrison has been withdrawn to another newly constructed fortress, five miles further up the river, and more impregnable than the one given up to the enemy. This movement, while shortening the lines of Lopez, and strengthening his defenses, extends the line of operations of the Allies, and deprives them of the assistance of their iron-clads. The inability of the Allies to take Humaita, was shown in the affairs of July 15th and 16th, when their column was badly repulsed by the Paraguayan, after it had got inside the fort, before the evacuation had been completed.

The war is exhausting the resources of Paraguay. Even women have been brought into the contest, under the command of a Mrs. Elizabeth Lopez, said to be the mistress of President Lopez, and mother of his children. Were there commercial reasons of sufficient weight to call for the intervention of the Great Powers, a speedy conclusion of the war would be reached, but the variances of the combatants are of a strictly local nature, and concern nobody but themselves, and hence they may fight it out while the world is busy about other matters.

Accounts of terrible earthquakes in Peru, lasting from the 13th to 16th of August, have reached us, the motion of the sea observed here on those days, undoubtedly was caused by the movements there.

Hon. Lorrin Andrews. The Honorable Rev. Lorrin Andrews, member of His Majesty's Privy Council of State, expired at his residence yesterday, Tuesday the 29th, in the 74th year of his age. He has been confined but little over a week having been seized with what appeared to be an attack of pleurisy, but which soon became complicated with other symptoms, and made it evident that death would come. Last Saturday he fell into a comatose state, which continued up to the extinction of his life.

Mr. Andrews was a graduate of Jefferson College, N. Y., and of the Princeton Theological Seminary in New Jersey. He was ordained and sent out by the A. B. C. F. M. as a missionary to the Hawaiian Islands, leaving Boston, November, 1827, and arriving here in March, 1828. He was stationed at Lahaina, and in 1831 was placed in charge of the Lahaiulana Seminary.

Dissolving his connection with the mission about 1843, he labored independently for two or three years, when he accepted service from the Government at the invitation of His Excellency G. P. Judd, the Minister of Finance. He came to Honolulu in 1845, and was made Judge in the Court of Oahu, by Governor Kekuanani with the approval of the House of Nobles, and continued connected with the Court, through its organization into Superior and afterwards Supreme Court, until he resigned his place on the Bench in 1855 to Judge G. M. Robertson. He was made a member of the Privy Council of State in 1848, and for many years served as its Secretary. For many years also he was regularly chosen Chairman of the Legislative Assembly. From the time of his resignation to judge an annuity has been regularly appropriated for him by the Assembly.

Mr. Andrews devoted himself also to Hawaiian philology and literature. From his first appearance on these islands, he has been indefatigable in the study and analysis of the language. He is the author of the Hawaiian Grammar, and also of two editions of the Hawaiian Dictionary—the latter edition published three years ago. His latter years have been devoted to collecting Hawaiian notes and traditions and other materials for a history.

He has passed away in a good old age, and closed his useful life in the serene and confident hope of a fervent and pure Christianity.

THE GERMAN FLAG. The Consular Flag of the North German Confederation was raised for the first time on Saturday last, at the residence of the late appointed Consul, Hon. Th. C. Heuck. The day was unusually sultry and overcast, but at mid-day the sun came out, and the clouds disappeared, giving a few hours of clear weather for the ceremony. A large company were present, both of official persons and foreign residents. Of the former, we noticed the members of His Majesty's Government, Governor of Oahu and Staff, the Diplomatic Representatives of the United States, England, and France; Capt. Simpson, of the U. S. S. Mohoana; and Capt. Price, of H. B. M.'s Ship Suez, with their Officers, and the several members of the Consular Corps.

Ample accommodations had been provided by the Consul to receive and entertain the guests who had gathered to do honor to an interesting occasion, and to congratulate him on the spreading of the new Flag to the breeze. The pavilion, erected for the occasion facing the flag-staff, was decorated with the Hawaiian and German Colors. The Standards of Hawaii and the North German Confederation adorned the centre, joined, and crowned by a wreath of evergreens and flowers. The flags of those States of the Confederation heretofore separately represented, were grouped along the front. These were the Prussian, Oldenburg, Bremen, Hamburg and Lubeck. Besides the above, the tent was ornamented with evergreens and flowers; and a garland of evergreens encircled the flag-staff from the ground to the top.

The Flag having been bent, Consul Heuck, standing at the flag-staff, made the following happy speech: "Indeed, nothing can be more gratifying and flattering to my countrymen and myself than to see so many of you kindly assisting us, by your presence, on this occasion."

Yes, we are about adding one more Flag to those of other friendly nations represented here, joining hands with each other, and clustering around the Hawaiian Standard in good will and good fellowship. For many years have we Germans enjoyed here the kind and cordial welcome of His Majesty, the King, and of His Government, and the good will and friendship of the foreign community and the Hawaiian people. We believe your sympathy is with us and our cause, and we shall always endeavor to merit a continuance of your good will. Based upon this feeling is our conviction that you will kindly commiserate our patriotic pride on a day like this, when we Germans—whether as naturalized subjects or foreign residents—express our love towards our native country from the bottom of our hearts, and when we look upon this Flag as a sign and symbol of a glorious future, (which may indeed be) as the first grand step towards an UNBROKEN, UNITED GERMANY. Gentlemen: Accept this Flag, and give it place in company with yours, and we pray you, we are sure, most sure—that there can never be any misunderstanding between us; that it is impossible there shall ever be any other enmity among us than to see how we can outdo each other in all that is good, and grand, and noble!

Mrs. Dora Heuck, dressed in white, with scarf and rosette, representing the German and Hawaiian colors, then took the honors, and, assisted by Capt. Haltermann, of the R. C. Wylie, and J. C. Glaze, Esq., sent up the flag, while the Brass Band played the National Anthem. H. A. Widmann, Esq., said: "FRIENDS AND COUNTRYMEN: We have come here to-day to witness the raising of the flag of the North German Confederation. Germany, the Fatherland, is as good as united! What distant impossible but a few short years ago, has been accomplished. Men-wise in council, and strong in the field, led by the genius of Bismarck, have vanquished all obstacles. The hopes of Germany are realized: its flag is recognized by all nations. Long may it wave! Gentlemen, I propose three cheers for the German Flag!"

The cheers were given with hearty good will by all present, and then more by the request of Mr. Heuck, for the Hawaiian Flag, after which the company moved to the luncheon awaiting them within doors. An elegant and bountiful table, loaded with all the luxuries of the season, and sparkling with Rhine and other wines, was soon surrounded, and grace having been said by Rev. S. C. Damon, the viands were discussed with evident satisfaction.

The attention of the guests was called by the host, who gave the toast, "His Majesty the King," which was responded to by His Excellency, S. H.
