

Land investigation is a long and continuing process, especially so, when the officers of this commission can only sit part of the time, and there are so few qualified native personnel. However, the work goes ahead even though at a slow pace.

Every effort is being made to get the native back to his own land. Former efforts to establish groups on the Northern Islands have at last succeeded. This together with the steps toward settling land now occupied by the military are conducive to the establishment of a sound basic economy.
