

Summary.

Increased efficiency of native medical personnel has resulted in improved diagnosis and treatment of patients, improving sanitary conditions, and increased accuracy and significance of statistical data. It now remains to lend further weight to the investigation and reporting of certain diseases with more adequate laboratory studies.