LOCALS

Weather, simply delightful.

Don't miss the Kahului races.

Reports from Hawaii and Kauai indicate that the labor troubles on those Islands are all settled.

There is a grain famine on Maui on account of the delay of Coast vessels, overdue at Kahului.

Yesterday was closing day for most of the schools on the Island, for a vacation lasting till September.

FOR SALE.—One family carriage driving mare, with or without brake and harness.

H. G. BOSWELL.

Spreckelsville, Maui.

The receipts of the District Magistrate of Waialua for the month of May was $1004.40 which breaks the record to date.

Attorney J. L. Coke, of Hons & Coke, went over to Hana on Wednesday's Claudine, to assist in the prosecution of alleged cattle thieves.

Rev. W. Ault of Lahaina, came over to Waialua on Thursday, and will remain and hold services at the Anglican Church tomorrow morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Streubeck and Miss Anna Streubeck, also Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler, and family will leave for the Coast a week from today.

The Lurline has not yet arrived at Kahului, although she cleared at San Francisco, June 6. She is either becalmed or detained by the plague in San Francisco, probably the latter.

High Sheriff Brown and half a dozen Honolulu police visited Maui this week. The high sheriff expresses himself as delighted with the general condition affairs on the Island.

Fujimoto, the ringleader in the Spreckelsville assault on the Japanese interpreter of the Census agent, was sentenced by the District Magistrate to six months imprisonment at hard labor.

Richards & Bal are a new firm of plumbers and pipe fitters operating in Waialua. But they are old residents of Waialua, and are booking a good deal of work among the kamaainas.

From the number of entries made in each of the races on the Fourth, there is no doubt but there be good day's sport. Our country cousins are hereby specially invited to come over to Waialua take in the show.

John Richardson, the Lahaina attorney, has been in Waialua this week attending Court, but went home yesterday afternoon to try some cases today. He will have further business before the Waialua District Court on Monday.

Prof. John A. Moore, of the Waialua grammar school, left for Honolulu yesterday afternoon, with the intention of attending the session of the Educational Society to be held at Charleston, S. C., provided he is not to be quarantined in California, en route.

George Hons, Waialua's leading attorney, is, with the exception of the Maui News man, the busiest man in town just now. What with the cares of his practice, and the secretaryship of the Maui Racing Association, he is kept busy from early morn to dewy eve.

Kinder & Beach are still kept busy making connections with the water mains. It is to be hoped that the water rates will not be fixed so high as require their further services in disconnecting impudicious water drinkers from the main.

Now that the mango and banana season are on, too much care cannot be exercised in the matter of keeping the sidewalks swept, so that treacherous peelings will not accumulate on them. The News man slipped on one of them the other day and nearly broke his heart.

The entire stock of goods on the Kahului Store have been removed, and the store building is being thoroughly renovated, in accordance with the instructions of the Board of Health. It will probably be a couple of weeks yet before the building is ready for occupancy.

There is no doubt but that the quarantine authorities will require a thorough fumigation of the cargoes of all vessels arriving at Kahului from San Francisco. San Francisco is now beginning to reap the fruits of her folly in denying the existence of plague and Maui consignees will have to suffer with her.

Dr. Garvin, President of the Board of Health came over to Maui this week to settle up quarantine affairs and to dispose of the buildings, fences and other property of the Board at Kahului. The Kahului R. R. Co. have bought all the buildings and fences. All matters relating to the quarantining of Kahului have been turned over to Dr. Carmichael of Honolulu, U. S. Marine Surgeon.

The United States authorities have quarantined against California, and no one is allowed to leave California without a clean bill of health from the United States authorities in California, even to go into a neighboring state. A United States agent is stationed at Reno, Nevada, to inspect all passengers from California going east on the overland trains, and those who have not clean bills of health are turned back.

East Maui Notes.

Mr. Charles Weatherbee, book-keeper at Hamao, has resigned to accept a like position on Puna Plantation, Hawaii. Mr. Zanzwatt of Kahului will probably be his successor at Hamao.

Nahiku will soon have 600 acres, or more in cane. The cane throughout the Hana district is looking healthy and green. Judge McKay has planted about five acres for seed cane, and is clearing to put in a large acreage next year. W. E. Shaw has just finished planting 31 acres of cane to be ground at the Hana mill, and is now clearing 50 acres additional to be planted next season. Mrs. W. F. Mossman is having her place cleared for the planting of cane.

Deputy Sheriff Wittrock gave a luau at the Hana court house in honor of Admission Day. The road from the steamer landing to the Hana store is being graded by the road board, under the supervision of George Groves.

Manager Meyers and bride returned to Hamao, and have gone to housekeeping in their beautiful home.

Quite a number of East Maui people are going to the Hilo races, per the steamer Claudine, July 2.

Mr. F. C. Atherton, Misses Simpson and Hart and two Seminary pupils from Mauna Olu made a tour of East Maui last week, and were enraptured with the wild, rugged beauty and tropical loveliness of the sections visited. They were hospitably entertained by W. E. Shaw at Nahiku and by Manager Gjerdum at Hana.

School Entertainments.

The several schools in Waialua have held closing exercises during this week, the rendition of which demonstrates that we are to be congratulated on having such competent teachers in our schools.

On Tuesday morning, a program of exercises was rendered by the pupils of St. Anthony's School, under charge of Brother Frank, which is too lengthy for publication and too excellent to be described in cold type. Those who failed to see it missed a treat. A marked feature of the entertainment was the manly and dignified bearing of the boys who took part. It is evident that besides teaching the boys the three R's, Brother Frank and his assistants have taught their charges to be manly and dignified little men. The entertainment was held on an improvised stage, on which many scenic and amusing effects were produced by the deft brush of Brother Frank, who is quite an artist.

The Girls school, in charge of the Sisters, gave a charming little entertainment on Thursday morning. The different features of the program were delightfully rendered, and along lines which clearly portrayed the heart teaching which the Sisters have been doing, as well as the head teaching.

On Friday, the Waialua English public school, under the charge of Prof. John A. Moore, and assisted by two of the very best lady teachers on the Islands, without any exceptions, Mrs. Heapy and Miss Nape, gave a lengthy, charming and excellently rendered program of closing exercises. It is to be regretted that Mrs. Heapy has gone to the Coast for a year, because her work in the school will be missed. It is also sincerely to be hoped that Miss Nape, who has been with us for a short time only, will remain permanently. Her work has been of a high class of merit; in short she is one of those teachers who has been "born" and not "made" for the work. Gifted as she is with all the qualities which go to make up a teacher, the parents of children under her charge could wish for nothing better than to see her permanently retained in the Waialua Grammar School.

Free Trip to San Francisco For Hawaii Teachers.

The "EVENING BULLETIN" of Honolulu offers a delightful vacation trip to the Pacific Coast and return, to the school teacher who shall be declared by popular vote to be the most popular teacher of the Hawaiian Islands. The votes which appear in each issue of the "Bulletin" should be cut out and sent to the "Bulletin" office where they are counted each week, and the result announced.

The names of the teachers do not appear in the paper but a list of names corresponding with the counted numbers may be obtained on application to the office.

The old standby, the Australian, which can always be depended on, or no territorial law, is the ship that will carry the fortunate teacher who secures the prize on her well-deserved outing trip. Everyone knows the Australian and though she does roll just a little bit, the food you get is so good it simply has to stay down. The genial captain and purser will undoubtedly do all in their power to make the trip a delightful time long to be remembered by the teacher who is declared the most popular of the Islands. The return ticket will be good for four months and the visit at the Coast will be limited in time only by the desires of the teacher.

If you want to give one of your teacher friends one of the most pleasant summers they have ever enjoyed just cut out the votes which appear in the upper right hand corner of this page in each issue and deposit them in the ballot box at the Bulletin office. If you are not satisfied with this slow way of bringing her to the front why then subscribe for the Bulletin and get your friends to subscribe. You will get all the news and the most correct news and get it all the time, and in addition you will be given votes to cast for your favorite teacher as follows, according to the term of your subscription:

1 MONTH ..... 40 votes
3 MONTHS ..... 150 "
6 MONTHS ..... 350 "
1 YEAR ..... 750 "

Subscriptions are 75 cents a month or $8 a year in advance.

THE MORAL RESURRECTION OF NO. 3927.

AN EASTER STORY

BY A. A. SMITH.

Copyright, 1917, by A. A. Smith.

For the second time in his checkered career Marlon Burnham was at point of variance with the mighty power known as public opinion, and for the second time he was getting the worst of the controversy. The occasion of his first disagreement with the all-powerful factor in human affairs before which penitents tremble had been altogether of his own seeking. His second variance was but the logical sequence of his first indiscretion and the result of circumstances which had passed entirely beyond his control.

Public opinion as crystallized into the machinery of the courts had decreed that for the protection of society Marlon Burnham should retire for a stated period of time into the seclusion of the state penitentiary, there to meditate upon the consequences of his transgression while laboring for the state and serve as an impressive warning to all who had sinned against the law. He had showered sympathy upon him when he knew him not. He had come back to them asking for justice, not sympathy, and they were not interested in the subject.

He turned away from the churchgoers into a bystreet leading to the river. The novelist who creates his situations with an easy disregard for truth would say that fate led his steps in that direction. The theologian would ascribe it to the hand of Providence, which was leading him to a momentous crisis in his career. As a matter of fact, it was only habit which caused him to follow the quiet street to the river's edge—the awakened impressions of years ago, when he was an upright and promising youth and this street was a favorite walk with him and Helen, and it was of Helen the ex-convict and social outcast was thinking as his feet trod the familiar path.

He knew that if there was one person in the world who could find excuse or palliation for his fall it was Helen. Not that she had any reason to remember him kindly, for his treatment of her had been fully consistent with the rest of his foolish, wicked career in the city where he had committed his crime, but somehow he felt that she would not judge him as severely as the townspeople had done. She had been his village sweetheart, and when he secured employment in the city and was drawn into the whirl of dissipation which caused his ruin he straightway deserted her for the dissipated companions who were not worthy to touch her hand. She had hidden her heartache beneath her pride, as women do, and soon afterward she left the village. When he was arrested and his associates abandoned him to face a hostile public sentiment alone, his heart yearned for the pure friendship of this girl, but he did not know where she was. And had he known he would never have stooped to seek her recognition in his ignominy. There was that much manhood still left within him.

Upon a fallen tree by the river's side he sat and watched the rippling water flowing at his feet. His brain was in a maddening whirl of remorse, despair and the burning sense of injustice. It seemed as if for him the race was ended. The reformatory theory of punishment was a lie. No man once within the shadow of those prison walls could hope to be treated like a man again, no matter how pure his intentions nor how circumspect the conduct of his after life. Why not end it all forever beneath the rippling waters? Physical self destruction could be no worse than the moral suicide he had already committed. Why continue to live when life could be nothing but a living death?

A sound among the trees near by roused him from his bitter thoughts. To the left the bank of the river was a little higher, rising abruptly several feet above the water. Glancing in the direction of the sound, he saw upon the bank a woman's form. Her back was toward him, but he could see by its graceful curves that the woman was young and of handsome figure. She turned partly toward him and looked long and earnestly upon the water. A light wrap slipped from her shoulders as she stepped close to the precipitous bank. She gazed long at the water sparkling in the sunlight and then knelt upon the bank, her hands clasped and head bowed in supplication. The grand melody of the Easter anthem was borne clearly to them from the village church.

At length the woman rose slowly from her knees. She turned her face toward the midday sun, and the watcher by the tree started forward with a smothered cry, for in the lone woman upon the bank he recognized his village sweetheart of the old days. She turned a startled face toward Marlon as her ear caught the sound.

It was therefore with surprise and distress that No. 3927, once more Marlon Burnham, found upon returning to his native town that public opinion was not inclined to take his view of his case. It did not cast into the scale the weight of his punishment against that of his wrongdoing and thereby balance the account between himself and society. On the contrary, it added the weight of those dreary days and nights in the penitentiary to that of his own sinful folly, and the balance was hopelessly against him. He had not only done wrong, but he had been found out. That was the unpardonable sin, and that was partly the reason the townspeople shunned him like a leper. Marlon did not think it was right. It seemed to him that there should be a point somewhere at which the Nemesis of retribution should cease to pursue him, and that was the occasion of his second disagreement with public opinion.

The melody of the Easter bells swelled upon the atmosphere as Marlon Burnham stood upon the main village street and watched the worshippers thronging past. They looked at him curiously, as though he were a freak instead of human like themselves. Some regarded him with a sort of contemptuous pity, while others frowned. No one spoke to him. Not a friendly face among all those he had known from his childhood looked into his.

He remembered some of those faces at his trial. Then, when he knew that he deserved punishment and had no claim upon the consideration of honorable men, silly women had brought him flowers in his cell and in their senseless, unwhimsical sentiment had sought to shield him from merited retribution. Now, when he had paid the penalty and was once more entitled to the recognition of honest men, the woman who had showered sympathy upon him knew him not. He had come back to them asking for justice, not sympathy, and they were not interested in the subject.

He turned away from the churchgoers into a bystreet leading to the river. The novelist who creates his situations with an easy disregard for truth would say that fate led his steps in that direction. The theologian would ascribe it to the hand of Providence, which was leading him to a momentous crisis in his career. As a matter of fact, it was only habit which caused him to follow the quiet street to the river's edge—the awakened impressions of years ago, when he was an upright and promising youth and this street was a favorite walk with him and Helen, and it was of Helen the ex-convict and social outcast was thinking as his feet trod the familiar path.

"For God's sake, Helen, tell me what it means! A few minutes ago I was almost tempted to kill myself. But you, why do you harbor such thoughts?"

She turned and looked at him curiously. "Did you really wish to end everything—and why?"

"Have you not heard my story, Helen?"

"I have never heard your name since I left the village."

Marlon picked up the wrap and placed it around her shoulders. The sudden relaxation from her nervous tension had left her weak and trembling, and in the expression of her face shame, doubt, fear and distress were mingled with the surprise aroused by Marlon's sudden appearance.

"Let us sit upon the log," he said, "and I will tell you the story of a village."

She listened eagerly to his story as he told it truthfully, without reservation or excuse for himself. "But is that all? Would you give up for that? You are a young man with many years in which to retrieve your good name, and disgrace means so little to a man."

"You do not speak from experience," he said. "Will you tell me why you wished to leap out yonder?"

The woman dropped her burning face into her hands, while a tempest of grief shook the frail form. Presently she looked at her companion.

"Why should I tell you? For what does the world cast a woman into a living hell while it forgives all else? What else could transform the hideous face of death into the kindly countenance of a friend? I may not atone for my sin as you can do for yours. No sentence of punishment can restore me to my lost estate. For one false step I must bear the social scourge forever and be driven to penitence through the darkness of public condemnation. Why should I live?"

Why, indeed? Marlon Burnham asked himself the question as with a sudden revulsion of feeling he arose and paced the slope. Helen, the truest of women, she who had always seemed to him to be above reproach, fallen so low! Could it be possible? Was the world, then, all alike—all false, deceitful, cruel?

She watched him a moment as he paced back and forth and then turned again toward the river and dropped her face in her hands. She had read his thoughts aright.

Marlon paused and looked at his companion, and a sense of the irony of the situation struck him like a blow. Who was he, the returned convict, the social pariah, to cast another stone at this poor woman? Was he raging less than an hour ago at the injustice of the world only to be himself unjust? Had she not suffered and atoned for her sin as he had done for his? Were there not some sins of his own for which he had never made atonement? Was she not still a thousand times better than himself, and was he, too, so permeated with unthinking prejudice that he could not grant her the opportunity to redeem herself?

He drew near and laid his hand upon her shoulder. She arose and looked at him, startled and afraid, but he took her shivering hands in his.

"Helen, a moment ago I condemned you unthinkingly, as the world does. Now I see that it was the same intolerant prejudice which is bounding me, too. It may be to the river bed. You are still infinitely better than I, but the world, I dare say, will treat us about equally. Do you dare face it with me? It may be there is something better for us there—a gleam of hope in the darkness—and, if not, the river will wait for us, and we can seek its refuge any time. Have you the courage to try? I swear to atone to you for all the evil I have done you, even as I have atoned to society for my offense against it. I swear to cherish you and honor no less the fallen woman than I, the fallen man, seek honor. The world is strong and bitter against us, but it may be we will find some friends there, and, if we fail, I swear to love you to the end, and we will seek this spot again together. Dear girl, shall we face it once more?"

She raised her shining eyes to his. "It is worth the trial. I will have courage for your sake."

With clasped hands they watched the friendly water for a moment, then turned to ascend the slope, just hesitating into the green of spring. The services in the church were ended, and as they went up to face the world together the glad message of the Easter bells ringing for the chase of service except over them, a triumphant, silvery chiming.

His One Song.
Paddy—Why will you sulk to that one song? I have heard you sing it for these five years and never knew you to sing any other. I should think you would find it awkward in company when you have sung your song and are unable to respond to the demand for an encore by giving something else.

Made It Even.
"Lawyer Niles was a humor loving attorney in my old Indiana town," said a drummer. "He owed me $1.90 for several months. He was a prominent citizen of the village, and I was the driver of a five seated carryall that made four trips daily between our town and a neighboring city. So I hesitated to run him. One day as I was passing along in front of his office he gladdened my heart by opening the door and stepping out into the road.

"Guess I owe you something, Parks?" he asked, looking up at me seated on the wagon.

"Yes, sir. It is $1.90. I remember."

"So it is. So it is"—reaching down in his pocket. "Have you got 10 cents about you?"

"Of course I had, and as I reached down into my coatpockets for the dime I saw visions of the $2 bill that would soon be asleep in my inside pocket. Truth to tell, I was overjoyed, for seldom before had I been in such pressing need for additional money as I was on that particular day. I found the change and gave it to Niles, who coolly put it in his pocket and walked back toward his office without giving me a cent.

"Thanks," said he rather unfeelingly as he pulled out a fresh cigar and lit it with exasperating imperturbability. "Thanks. That'll make it an even $2 now!"—Detroit News-Tribune.

Scientific Safe—"Cracking."
In the experiments made in a burglarious way, among others, a $3,000 square safe of the most approved construction was attacked by inserting in the crevice about the locked door 4-8-10 ounces of nitroglycerin, and in eight minutes after the operation of loading was begun the charge was fired, with the result that the whole of the jamb below the door was blown out and a hole made in the door of sufficient size to admit the hand and arm, while the doors and divisions of the interior compartments were completely shattered. On repeating the operation with 1/4 ounces of forcite dynamite the door was completely torn off.

Among experiments made to demonstrate the resistance of structures to attack by a mob was one upon a safe 29 inches cube, with walls 4 1/2 inches thick, made up of plates of iron and steel, which were re-enforced on each edge so as to make it highly resisting, yet when a hollow charge of dynamite 9 1/2 pounds in weight and untaunted was detonated on it a hole three inches in diameter was blown clear through the wall, though a solid cartridge of the same weight and of the same material produced no essential effect.—Popular Science Monthly.

A Cautious Man.
The familiar saw that no man can be a hero to his valet was illustrated to me the other day in an amplified and peculiar form. It was while sitting with a man of affairs that his stenographer entered, saying that a certain other man desired to speak to my acquaintance over the telephone. "Take it," said my man and forthwith picked up his extension machine, through which he talked with the man at the other end, the conversation including matters of finance, politics and personal business of a most familiar and confidential sort. He didn't mind me at all—I didn't count. We continued our conversation, and just as I was ready to leave the stenographer entered with several sheets of manuscript, which she laid on the desk.

"That goes on file," said my man. "I invariably have a record kept of my telephone talks, and I've found it to pay. While I talk the stenographer holds the main line and puts it down." I made up my mind that if I had anything particular to say to that man hereafter I'd tell him on the street or in some place other than his office.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Restaurant Thieves.
"Why don't you use after dinner coffee spoons?" asked a woman at a first class up town restaurant of the proprietor the other evening, finding it somewhat inconvenient to use a large spoon with her small cup. "We did have them when we first opened," answered the proprietor. "We had six dozen, but they gradually disappeared until now only three are left, and we consider it more economical to use the larger spoons, for which people do not seem to have such a fancy."

At many restaurants when a glass of claret or sherry is called for it is served in a tiny decanter. These miniature bottles are very attractive. They seem to appeal, as many small things do, to the taste of many people. One man who visits now and again many different restaurants boasts that he has over two dozen of these pretty little decanters. He doesn't say how he came by them, but he didn't purchase them.—New York Times.

A British Army Corps.
The British army corps as nominally constituted numbers 36,253 officers and men. A large number of these are "technical" troops, in charge of the pontoons, field telegraph, railway appliances, balloons, field batteries and field hospitals. Eliminating all of these technical troops, the strength of a division in infantry, cavalry and artillery is 3,449 men, with 18 guns; of an army corps, 39,709 men, with 102 guns.

WASN'T AFRAID.

But He Wasn't Looking For Any Trouble Either.

Prosecuting Attorney Wheeler Campbell was in an unusual predicament Saturday. He was prosecuting a peace warrant in the police court. One of the most essential questions to be asked on such occasions is:

"Are you afraid that unless this defendant is restrained by law he will do you some great bodily harm?"

This question he propounded to the prosecuting witness, who was a stalwart man, almost twice the size of the man he had sworn out the peace warrant against.

"Now, sah, I ain't!" he boldly replied.

"You are not?" asked the attorney in amazement. "Now, wait. Let me ask you the question again, so you'll understand it. Are you afraid of him?"

"No, sah, I ain't!" he said a'fraid o' dat niggah," he sputtered. "I ain't sca'd o' ob him!"

"Are you afraid he will attempt to do you bodily harm?" tentatively asked the attorney.

"Not ef—ef—not ef I kin git a fa'r showin' at 'im, boss!" he said as he glared defiantly at the prisoner.

The spectators here began to laugh. The prisoner's stolid countenance also relaxed into a sinister smile, but the witness contended that he wasn't a bit afraid of the prisoner and didn't seem to care who knew it.

"What did you get this peace warrant for, then?" demanded the attorney.

"I jes' wanted—jes' wanted," he explained. "fo' to show dat niggah dat my 'entions wuz peaceably 'inclined, sah."

The court then asked a few questions and found out that the witness was afraid the prisoner would shoot him or do something of that kind, but he wasn't really "afraid" of him. The defendant was accordingly required to execute bond, and at the same time the witness' reputation for fearlessness was unaffected.—Paducah Sun.

PYTHIAS WAS IN LUCK.

An Unusual Comment on a Very Touching Story.

"Pa," asked a North Side boy, "who was Pythias?"

"Oh, he was a fellow that lived long, long ago in a country where there was a cruel king. This king had sentenced a man to death, and the condemned asked to be allowed to go home and say goodby to his wife, but the king wouldn't let him out because he could not give half."

This question he propounded to the prosecuting witness, who was a stalwart man, almost twice the size of the man he had sworn out the peace warrant against.

"Now, sah, I ain't!" he boldly replied.
