FOREIGN NEWS

Peking Government Dead.
NEW YORK, September 7.—A dispatch to the Herald from Tien Tsin, August 28, via Chefoo, Sept. 3 and Shanghai Sept. 5, says: It is reported that the American Minister approves of inviting Li Hung Chang to Peking to negotiate on behalf of China. Those who know this viceroy best regard him as insincere, incapable and unreliable. In Peking the Government is dead. It means either partition or the maintaining of independent provincial governments.

Overtures by Mandarins.
NEW YORK, September 7.—A dispatch to the Herald from Peking, dated missing, via Tien-Tsin, September 3 and Shanghai, Wednesday says: Overtures toward peace negotiations with the allied ministers have been made by a few mandarins but there is no prince among them. The allied forces are hesitating to enter the palace, fearing for the prestige of the Chinese government and if the buildings were destroyed and burned the government of the whole of China would fall on the powers, rendering partition inevitable. This delay is encouraging the forces who have murdered two French soldiers in the center of Peking.

Declines to Withdraw.
WASHINGTON, September 6.—Germany has very politely informed the Administration that she will not withdraw her troops from Peking. In her position Germany has the support of Italy and Austria, and, there can be no doubt, of England also. The Administration is just waking up to the fact that it has been outwitted by the young Kaiser; that Great Britain is no longer the close friend, and that our allies in the sight of the world now are France and Russia, the ancient enemies of our one-time friend.

England Pleased.
LONDON, September 7, 3:20 A. M.—Germany's polite refusal to withdraw from Peking is commented upon with keen satisfaction in London, and the hope is expressed that Lord Salisbury will show similar firmness. The British reply has not yet been formulated. Lord Salisbury desires to consult with his colleagues and has notified the Foreign Office of his intention to return to London from the continent early next week.

Russell Sage on Bryan.
NEW YORK, September 6.—In an interview this morning Russell Sage, the aged financier, said, discussing politics: "I do not believe Mr. Bryan's election would be such a disastrous event. But then I don't think he will be elected. Vermont has just spoken and her vote of 30,000 majority for the Republican ticket means a great deal. There's a lot of sound common sense in Vermont. "Why, if Mr. Bryan should be elected he would have to come to the financiers for advice as to the financial policy of the Government. His election would soon convert him from his silver views."

Won't Buy our Cotton.
MANCHESTER, Eng., September 7.—At a meeting of the cotton spinners here today it was decided practically unanimously, not to purchase American spot cotton during the month of September. Four-fifths of the employers in the trade were represented. It is anticipated that the decision will lead to the closing of scores of mills for several weeks.

Gold from Wreck Bay.
VICTORIA (B. C.), September 7.—The steamer Willapa from the west coast brought $1500 in gold from Wreck Bay, the output of three weeks. The miners expect to take about $200 a day now, since the big machines have been put in.

Trade Unionism.
LONDON, September 5.—At this morning's meeting of the Trades Union Congress in session at Huddersfield, Delegates Kemp and Hunter of the American Federation of Labor both delivered addresses and were presented with gold watches as mementos of their visit. Mr. Kemp contended that the interests of the worker of the world were identical and if ever universal peace was reached it would be through the instrumentality of trades unionism.

HAWAII NEI

W. D. Potter has been appointed a teacher at Lahainaluna.

The nomination for candidates on Hawaii for the legislature will be made on the 29th.

W. M. Hayselden, of Lanai, has taken a position with the Hutchinson Sugar Company.

McManns, the horse trainer, will take charge of the racing stock at Horner's ranch, Hawaii.

The Olaa squatters oppose the candidacy of Sam Parker. And there are nine of them, all told.

Mrs. Thomas Brown, mother of Cecil, Frank and Godfrey Brown, died in Honolulu on Sunday last.

The Arlington Hotel building was sold to John Ouderkirk for $180, and the McGrew residence for $70.

Dr. J. T. McDonald and Dr. C. B. Cooper of Honolulu have formed a partnership in the practice of medicine.

O. Tillander, first mate of the James Makee died at the Queen's Hospital, Honolulu, last Sunday after a few hours illness.

Mullet will soon be a thing of the past in Hilo harbor, on account of the use of close meshed nets. The legislature should correct this.

Scab or veruosis has attacked the Olaa lemons. A spray of ammoniacal solution of copper carbonate is said to be a sure remedy.

Alex. Dowsett, son of the late J. I. Dowsett, came over on the Claudine on Wednesday to take charge of the stock ranch on Lanai.

New evidence connecting the two Okonagan sailors with the murder of Ah Cho, the Hilo hack driver, has been discovered, and the two men have been rearrested.

The Bow Wongs of Hilo have offered a reward for the apprehension of the slayer of the hackman Ah Cho. The sailors who were arrested on suspicion have been released.

Nominations for the Legislature must be filed with the Secretary of the Territory thirty days before election day for the other Islands and ten days for the Island of Oahu.

Governor Dole recently received a cablegram from Commissioner Irwin which reads as follows: "Received grand prize, Primary Education; gold medal, Kamehameha school; gold medal, sugar."

H. E. Cooper went to Hilo last week and while there conferred the Scottish Rite degrees of Masonry from the fourth to the Thirty second, inclusive, upon leading members of Kilauca Lodge, 330.

The Hiloites are trying to find out who struck Billy Patterson. They blame the missionaries for keeping the Territorial Convention away from Hilo, even at the risk of accusing Johnny Hughes of being a missionary himself.

The government has decided to take charge of the outfall end of the sewerage system and complete the work, charging the expense to the bondsmen of John H. Wilson, the contractor, who has failed to complete the job in time.

The shippers have deferred their visit to Hilo until January, owing to the fact that a number of members of the Order in the eastern states wish to join the excursion. It will probably require two steamers to bring them when they do come.

Judge Estee, U. S. Attorney Baird and Marshal Ray visited Hilo last week. While there, Judge Estee appointed T. C. Ridgeway as commissioner in bankruptcy, and Carl C. Smith as United States Commissioner. S. Smith, C. S. Parsons, T. C. Col. Ridgeway and J. U. Smith, attorneys-at-law, were admitted to practice in the Federal Courts.

German Satire Of America.

The Literary Digest has translated from the St. Petersburg Zeitung, a German paper published at the Russian capital, a satirical sketch called "A Self-Made Man; a Story for Good Little Boys," written ostensibly for the American school reader. It hits off the American character as seen from Europe and runs thus:—

There was once a little boy and his name was Freddie. He did much for the entertainment of the neighborhood by fishing in other people's private ponds and picking other people's fruits. When he was scolded for it, he would proudly say: "I am a free citizen of a free country." The neighbors wanted his father to whip him, but the father said he would not thus degrade the future president of the United States. Such thing could be done only in enslaved Europe. And Freddie grew and prospered. He always attacked boys who were weaker than himself, beat them, and took away their pennies in the name of civilization and humanity. For in Freddie's veins ran strong and pure the undiluted blood of the noble Anglo-Saxon.

One day Freddie's father was told that his son had swindled a friend of the family with a bogus dollar and had gotten 85 cents change. And the father was deeply moved and said: "I always knew Freddie would some day be a great man." Then he turned Freddie's pockets inside out and transferred the 85 cents to his own. After that Freddie was placed with a wise merchant who taught him that two and two make five. Freddie was wiser than he and learned how to make two and two equal to nine. Then his boss made him a partner. And Freddie was worthy of the trust. He managed to get hold of all the shares and to give his old boss the bounce. And all the people were loud in their praises of Freddie.

Then Freddie bought sugar and sold it at a quarter of its value until he had ruined all competition, when he made good his losses tenfold by raising the price enormously. And all the people praised Freddie.

Freddie built a railroad to ruin the road which ran through his city, and he succeeded and made the public pay. He oiled the machinery of Congress and worked it so that tariffs excluded everything he wished to sell dear, and there was no competition. And the people still more praised Freddie. All the papers published vile portraits of him; he was called the man of the hour and the Napoleon of finance. Freddie had become a great American.

But Freddie was not proud. He remained the same humble, pious, Godfearing Freddie. He went diligently to church and when the pastor spoke of the divine blessing which is certain to be showered upon honest work, he would be moved to tears and nod his head in approval.

Freddie still lives. He is busy "making" his fiftieth million. He made it honestly out of the profits of sales of grain to the starving millions of India. Freddie is the pride of his fellow citizens, and the most shining example of an American self-made man in the most idealistic sense of the word.

Origin of "Canard."

The phrase "newspaper canard," according to invention, originated in the following way: About fifty years ago a French journalist contributed to the press an account of an experiment which he declared he had himself performed. Twenty ducks were placed together, and one of them having been cut up into small pieces, was gluttonously gobbled up by the other nineteen. Another bird was then sacrificed for the remainder, and so on, until one duck was left, who thus contained in his inside the other nineteen. The story "took," and was copied into all the journals of Europe and America. It has long since been forgotten, but the "canard" has remained as a title, canard being the French word for "duck."

A statistician figures that the total steam power in use in the world in 1896 was 66,000,000 horse power, against 50,000,000 in 1890; 34,000,000 in 1880; 9,500,000 in 1860, and 1,650,000 in 1840.

Hon. John Richardson of Lahaina took a flying trip to Molokai this week.

Deputy Sheriff Lindsey of Lahaina visited Wailuku on Tuesday.

Rev. W. Ault will hold divine services at the Anglican Church tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

An epidemic of coughs and colds amounting almost to the dignity of the grippe is prevalent in Wailuku.

Mr. Dowsett, accompanied by F. H. Hayselden and Mr. Pain of Honolulu, went over to Lanai on Wednesday.

Mr. N. J. Leavitt, of Siskiyou County, Cal., paid a short visit to Maui, and will soon return to the mainland.

Chin Hou's Restaurant, long a landmark in Wailuku, is to be removed to make room for the new drugstore.

The framework of the big sugar warehouse at Paia is about finished, and the building will soon be completed.

There are rumors that a gentleman of Kahului will soon wed one of Wailuku's charming young ladies.

Judge Kalua, accompanied by his wife, is visiting on Molokai. He will return in time to reopen Court on the first of October.

Capt. Bamberry and Lieut. McLeod of the Salvation Army go to Officers' Council at Honolulu today, and will return on Wednesday.

We are reliably informed that there is an escaped leper at Lahaina, now living with his wife who is engaged in the manufacture of curios.

Mr. George W. Carr, U. S. postal agent, went to Hana on the Claudine and will return today. He is arranging contracts for carrying the mails on Maui.

Mr. Jas. Taylor, who constructed the Wailuku & Kahului water works, is engaged in surveying the proposed line of railroad for the Kahului Railroad Co. to Paia and Hamakua.

Dr. R. I. Moore, the popular Honolulu dentist, is making his annual visit to Maui. He is here next two weeks, his victims can find him located at Paia, as the guest of Mr. Fred. Armsstrong.

An independent democratic meeting was held at Lahaina on Wednesday evening. Colonel W. H. Cornwell, John H. Wise, Thomas Clark, and William White were the principal speakers.

There are entirely too many idle Japanese hanging about Wailuku. It would be a good idea for the police to spot a few of these flaneurs and try the inherent virtues of the vagrant law on them.

NOTICE.—All those who have any books belonging to the Makawao Book Club, received by them previous to September, 1900, are requested to send them to

MRS. W. S. NICOLL
Hamakua, Maui.

The Board of Registration left for Molokai on Thursday, to remain for the rest of the month. On Saturday, Sept. 29, they will be at Honokohau, Maui, in the forenoon, at Kahakuloa from 1 to 2 p. m., and at Waihee from 4:30 to 5:30 the same day.

Last night, at a called meeting of the heads of all the departments at Spreckelsville, Mr. David Center was formally introduced by Manager Lowrie as assistant manager, and he assumed his duties as such this morning. Mr. Lowrie goes to Honolulu today.

Our readers are treated this week to a bright and well written sketch of Beautiful Ulupalakua, written by a talented lady resident of Maui. There is subject matter for many such sketches, about the Island, and it is a favor to our readers to find such sketches, so well written.

Mr. Grimwood, of Grimwood & Richardson, Honolulu, accompanied by Mr. Dexter, came over on the Claudine on Wednesday, to begin work on the Electric Power Plant in Iao Valley. Mr. Grimwood returned to Honolulu on the Mauna Loa, but Mr. Dexter will remain here.

On last Sunday, while Mr. Cyrus Green was in Wailuku, three drunken sailors boarded the Mokihana and ran her on the beach. Mr. Filler has kindly tendered Mr. Green the use of the launch Talulu, and it is possible that the Mokihana can be floated again with out materials damage.

A Japanese named Nishida was found drowned between Lahaina and Kaanapali, just opposite the cocoa nut grove, on last Wednesday morning, by a native fisherman. Murder was at first suspected, but an autopsy by Dr. Davison disclosed the fact that he was drowned, and it is now believed that he committed suicide on account of his wife having deserted him the night before and gone to Hilo.

Prof. Koebel came over on Wednesday's Claudine, to investigate the ravages of the "Olinda beetle." This beetle has been ravaging Maui for the last eight or ten years, confining its depredations principally to forest trees, but recently it has attacked fruit trees in Makawao, notably the lime orchard of Mr. W. O. Aiken. The mongoose was discovered by Prof. Koebel to be a deadly foe of the beetle. A more efficient one however will probably reward the Professor's researches.

NEW DRUG STORE.

To be Immediately Established in Wailuku.

Mr. W. H. Field, former manager of the Home Bakery, Honolulu, but for several months past a resident of Wailuku, has this week taken a twenty year lease on the property on the corner of Main and High street, opposite Hoffman & Veltzen's store, now occupied by Ching Hou's bakery, and will at once erect a large and elegant drug store.

This is not to be done because there is a boom in Wailuku, for as a matter of fact there isn't any boom here. Neither is because the News has advocated a drug store. The real reason is that there is not at present a drug store on the Island of Maui. Mr. Field has been here long enough to ascertain the real needs of the town and of the Island, and is going to work in a business like way to supply the need.

The store will have a frontage of 30 feet on Main street, by 100 feet depth on High street. Plans for the building are being completed, and work will be commenced as soon as the present buildings are removed. Mr. Field goes to Honolulu today to complete details, and will return on next Wednesday.

Mr. Chas. P. Faulkner, a registered druggist of over 25 years experience in San Francisco, and former manager of the Grant Drug Co., will probably be the manager of the new Wailuku drug store. Mr. Faulkner, who has spent several weeks in Wailuku, leaves today for the Coast via Honolulu, to lay in a stock of drugs and supplies for the new establishment, among which will be a circulating library, a soda fountain and a plant for an icecream parlor in the rear of the drugstore. He expects to return in time to cater to the Christmas trade in Wailuku, and it is hoped that the building will be ready by his return which will be within two months.

ELECTRIC POWER PLANT.

To Be at Once Constructed in Iao Valley.

Manager W. J. Lowrie, to whose foresight and indomitable pluck Spreckelsville is indebted for its recent big ditch, has inaugurated another great enterprise, no less important to the plantation, that of constructing an electric power plant in Iao Valley for the purpose of bringing power to the Spreckelsville pumps.

Messrs Grimwood & Richardson, of Honolulu, have been given charge of the construction of the plant, and have already put their men to work. Preliminary surveys are to be made, on which to base estimates for plans, cost, etc. As soon as these are completed, the machinery will be ordered and the work of construction commenced.

It will be some months yet, possibly a year, before the plant is completed and the power ready for use at the plantation pumps. But their construction is definitely determined upon, and it is Mr. Lowrie's intention to push the work to completion at once.

The proposition of bringing electric power from Iao Valley to Spreckelsville plantation has been under consideration for some time and now it is an assured fact.

Beautiful Ulupalakua

A Plantation of the Past.

This is a time of plantation making in these Islands. New plantations are springing up like magic, and everybody is looking forward with enthusiasm to a busy and prosperous future under the reign of King Sugar. There seems little time to think of anything in the past, the present claims all the activity, energy and virile force of the people.

But there is a place on the Island of Maui where the visitor gets a glimpse into the past. This is the old McKee plantation, sometimes spoken of as Ulupalakua, but now called Rose Ranch. Here one cannot but indulge in day dreams as he wanders about and looks upon the evidences of a past opulence which it would be hard to duplicate in any of the plantations of today. Ulupalakua was at the height of its beauty and prosperity forty years ago, when the great central plain of Maui was still a desert of whirling red dust, before it had been made to blossom into the green and fertile plantations of Paia and Spreckelsville, by the magic touch of capital, labor, energy and irrigation.

High up on the shoulder of old Haleakala was built the beautiful McKee mansion, surrounded by large grounds, set out with choice and beautiful shrubbery and intersected with cement walks in every direction. Below, stood the sugar mill, and surrounding it were the cottages for the laborers and for guests,—one cottage having been specially built to entertain royalty. There were miles of beautiful carriage drives bordered with rows of fine trees, winding in and out, up and down those enchanting hills,—one drive winding to the very top of Prospect Hill, a spur of the mountain as high as Punchbowl.

At the extreme summit of this hill the drive ended at a little park with a tiny summerhouse. From this point a gloriously enchanting view is spread out before the eyes. The Islands of Kahoolawe and Molokini lie at one's feet like gems in the bosom of the ocean. Far away is Lahaina, and nearer is Maalaea Bay, while across the narrow isthmus is the sweep of Kahului Bay with its little seaport and a cluster of feathery masts of shipping. On the summit of this hill are still blooming beautiful jasmynes and lilies, but the terraced driveway has fallen into decay.

From this hill one can look out over a broad expanse of acres where once grew fields of sugar cane. The old mill is now a crumbling ruin. The roads are overgrown with roots and washed out by the rains of many years. The cottages are gone, and the persistent lanana is fast encroaching upon the grassy pasture lands. Far down the slope on a prominent point of land in a grove of cypress trees which ever whisper mournfully of the past, is an imposing mausoleum in which lie the bodies of James McKee and his wife.

This man of unbounded energy lies at rest, but all about him are the evidences of his labors. Time, which has brought ruin to many things about the place, has brought to perfection the thousands of massive trees which he grouped in artistic clusters all over the plantation.

Numerous immense reservoirs still stand as monuments to his far sighted plans. In the old house are still some relics of bygone elegance. Among these are some fine old koa tables and other furniture on which collectors are casting longing eyes. On the grounds, there stands a curious old Hawaiian rain god on which the natives still hang leis during dry seasons. It is indeed a delightful place in which to rest and dream.

The owners are now beginning operations toward making Rose Ranch a fine cattle ranche. There are already some thousands of choice cattle roaming over those fertile pastures, the beef from which commands a premium of two or three cents in the Honolulu market. The number of stock cattle is to be increased, and soon again Rose Ranch will take its place as one of the great ranches of the Island.

At present, Ulupalakua presents an object lesson as to the value and importance of tree planting. No other such exhibit of trees can be found on the Islands. To plant a tree is to do something for posterity. When one looks upon the thickets of figs or upon the groves of mangoes and other fruit-bearing trees at Ulupalakua, he realizes that here upon this island home of ours, there should be fruit in abundance for all.

Kahului Notes.

Considerable inconvenience, to say the least of it, was entailed upon intending passengers by the Claudine from Kahului to Windward ports. They began to arrive here by 10 a. m. and were disgusted to find that the Claudine would not sail till some time in the night. Thus they had to loaf away a whole day which they might have spent at home, if some one on the Claudine had been thoughtful enough to inform Lahaina "Central" of the late and unusual sailing hour. The people on the steamer must have known beforehand how much freight they had to land at Kahului, and somewhere near at what hour she would leave, and the different "Centrals" on Maui are always courteous and obliging enough to let the public know such information in time to be of service.

This serves as a reminder that the telephone service on Maui is far ahead of that on Oahu, and indeed one would have to go far to find superior service, or a set of telephone operators more civil and willing to be of service.

The Mokihana is again on beach near the Wailuku sand-hills. She persistently refuses to be taken to Wailuku, however skillful and spirited the navigators may be who are aboard of her, and she is now grinding holes in her planks on the rocks, and is in great danger of going to pieces. This would be a serious loss to her owner, who has ventured little all in her purchase, and the kindly superintendent of the K. E. R. is doing his utmost to avert the catastrophe.

A small cane-fire happened at Spreckelsville near Camp 5, on Wednesday morning, but no more cane was burned over than could be disposed of in one day's grinding, and he loss was nil.

A TANGLE OF TELEGRAMS.

BY HOWARD FIELDING.

Copyright, 1890, by Charles W. Cooke.

Mr. Bolton figures in this narrative as the stony hearted parent of a beautiful daughter. Most people know him only as I. Eugene Bolton, druggists' sundries, John street, New York.

"Bertha," said he one day to the beautiful daughter aforesaid, "I do not like George Hallett."

"Neither do I, father," replied the dutiful child. "I love him!"

This brief and pointed colloquy was the climax of many conversations. It stated a situation not at all unusual, but just as difficult for the persons involved as if it had never figured in history or romance.

George was the New York manager of Girard Freres et Cie, a Paris firm dealing in silks. It was a responsible position for a very young man, and George was making quite a bit of money. It was not his prospects to which Mr. Bolton objected; in fact, his principal accusation was that George was "one of those handsome men who at-ways have 500 silly women chasing after them." He did not wish to see his daughter join the procession.

Besides, Mr. Bolton preferred Irving Meade, a young man who stood in the shadow of a fortune and had recently come into Mr. Bolton's employ that he might be kept from idleness while the fortune's shadow was becoming solid and substantial. Mr. Meade was not a handsome man or much pursued by sighing maidens, despite his prospective wealth. To Bertha he was a joke.

The Boltons lived in Englewood, N. J. A widowed sister of Mrs. Bolton, Mrs. Laura Merriam, resided in New York. The relations between her and the Boltons were not cordial, except as to Bertha, who was a favorite with Mrs. Merriam. As the widow was wealthy, Mr. and Mrs. Bolton viewed this intimacy with favor.

Now, it happened that occasionally Bertha would receive a telegram like this:

Meet me at Twenty-third street, Sixth avenue "L" station, up town side, 12 tomorrow.

From Mrs. Merriam? Oh, no—from George! Bertha could show these messages to her mother and use them as an excuse for going to town without the least fear of discovery, for Mrs. Bolton and Mrs. Merriam would probably not meet within six months. So Bertha and George were enabled to enjoy many luncheons together in the swiftest restaurants and usually a matinee at the theater afterward.

It was on a Tuesday that George sent a message couched in the exact language of the sample given above. Bertha was not at home when the messenger boy arrived, so the telegram was given to Mrs. Bolton, who read it. She knew that it was Bertha's habit to answer these telegrams from "aunt," and she also knew that Bertha would not return home till quite late in the evening, as she was to take dinner at the house of a friend. Such being the case and as she was sure that Bertha could go to town on the following day, she sent away this reply by the boy who had brought the message:

Mrs. Merriam, 95 West — Street, New York: Yes. Tomorrow, 12, Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street.

When Mrs. Merriam received this, she did not know what "yes" meant and was inclined to regard it as an error of the telegrapher's. The important part of the message, however, was clear—Bertha wanted to meet her tomorrow at noon at Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street.

It must be understood that shopping appointments of this kind had sometimes been made between them. When Bertha learned that her mother had answered the telegram, she was somewhat disturbed in mind. She decided to telegraph George on the following day telling him to make the time 11:45 instead of 12. Thus they could meet and George could get out of the way before Mrs. Merriam should arrive. If aunt should come, it would spell the afternoon for Bertha and George; if she didn't, Bertha would know where to find George, who would be waiting, and an ingenious note of explanation would satisfy Mrs. Merriam's mind in regard to the telegram.

A little before 10 o'clock Wednesday forenoon Bertha entered the Englewood telegraph office, intending to send her message to George.

"I've just sent a telegram for you up to your house," said the operator. "You can see a copy of it here, though."

Bertha read as follows: "Make it 1:30 instead of 12. Unavoidable."

There was a nice situation. Was this dispatch from her aunt or from George? She puzzled over the question for several minutes and finally decided that the expression, "Make it 1:30," stamped the communication as the work of a man.

Therefore it would be useless to telegraph to George. She could meet her aunt first and George later. All things were falling out well. It was a considerable annoyance, however, to find, on reaching the railroad station, that she had just missed the train which she had intended to take. The time which she had spent in puzzling over that message had accomplished this misfortune—it was impossible to reach the appointed place by 12. Aunt Laura, in the picturesque language of the period, would be "stood up," but to meet George at 1:30 would be easy.

As the old-fashioned novelists used to say, let us leave Bertha waiting in the railroad station while we follow the fortunes of her father.

When I. Eugene Bolton reached his office that morning about 9 o'clock, he discovered that he had left certain important documents at home. He needed them that day, and at first he had it in mind to telegraph his wife to send them in by Bertha.

"That's what I'll do," said he to Irving Meade, who had been present while Bolton was searching his pockets for the papers. "I'll have Bertha bring them in."

"Is Bertha coming here today?" asked the young man in a voice that betrayed his joy.

"She wasn't coming here," replied Bolton. "She was going shopping with her aunt, Mrs. Merriam."

"Mrs. Merriam telegraphed her, I suppose?" said Meade in a peculiar tone.

"Why, yes," said Bolton. "How did you know that?"

"Mr. Bolton," responded the young man impressively, "I've been on to that game for some time."

"What game?" cried the head of the firm.

"That telegram wasn't from Mrs. Merriam. It was from George Hallett!"

"Cesar's ghost!" exclaimed Bolton. "What do you mean?"

"I know a fellow in the telegraph office in Englewood," replied Meade. "I know where the answers are addressed when those 'shopping' messages come to Bertha."

"You do, eh? Well, why didn't you tell me before?"

"I didn't feel like doing it," answered the young man. "I didn't want to get Bertha into trouble."

"There's going to be trouble if what you say is true," said Bolton. "I'll be at Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street at noon today myself."

"That is where they are to meet, is it?" said Meade.

"It's where several people are going to meet," responded Bolton, "and one of them will have a club with him."

"I think it will be very unfortunate, sir," said Meade. "If your daughter were present at such a scene, it might get into the papers."

"You're right," replied Bolton. "But what can I do?"

"Telegraph her—using Mrs. Merriam's name—not to come till later. Then go up there and meet Hallett alone."

"I'll do it!" said Bolton. And he wrote the telegram of which Bertha saw a copy, as has been already related.

Now, it happened that Bolton did not know that his wife had answered "Mrs.

"I am very much disappointed," said Mrs. Merriam in an offended tone. And she turned away without another word and walked down the stairs to the street.

Bolton waited awhile to make sure that Hallett was not coming, and then he took a train down town.

"A nice fool's errand you sent me on!" he yelled at Meade when the two were again in Bolton's private office. And he told the story of his adventure.

"I'll bet you $1,000 to a cent," exclaimed Meade, "that I am not mistaken about this. She must have got your telegram and sent some sort of reply to Hallett. He'll be there at 1:30, sure."

"I'd like to know whether there is anything in this," said Bolton doubtfully.

"Go up there, and you'll see," said Meade. And he finally persuaded his employer to go.

The instant that Bolton passed the threshold Meade ran out by another way. He did not purpose to have any mistake this time. He knew that Bertha would be at the rendezvous, and he decided to make sure about Hallett. Such a scene as must result would be directly in his interest, though he would have preferred that Bertha should not be present. He feared the effect of her persuasive eloquence upon her father, who really loved her with all his heart, and would be in danger of forgiving Satan himself if Bertha should plead for him. However, the chances were that Hallett's case would be settled forever.

So Meade dodged into a telegraph office and wrote out a message to Hallett in Bertha's name making the appointment at the place and hour already mentioned.

"Send this," said he to the operator in charge of the telegraph station, "and say that a young lady left it in a great hurry."

Then he gave the operator half a dollar and ran out. By good leg work he got ahead of Bolton at the Cortlandt street station of the elevated road. Arrived at Twenty-third street, he took up a position on the opposite side from that where the lovers and the late father were to meet. He could see well enough from the windows of the waiting room across the tracks. At last that was the best place that he dared to take. He would not have missed a glimpse of the scene for any reasonable sum of money.

He had not been waiting long when Bertha appeared, looking as sweet as a

A HAND WAS LAID UPON HIS SHOULDER, rose and as happy as a bird. Five minutes, ten minutes, passed. Where was Hallett? Where was Bolton? Twelve minutes, then 13—ominous number. An up town train stopped at the station, and at the same moment a down town train rushed in, blocking the vision of the jealous lover. When he could see across the tracks again, Bertha and George were greeting each other in a manner much more than cordial.

But where was Mr. Bolton? Meade asked that question of his own tormented heart, and there was no reply. Bertha and George began to move toward the stairs leading to the street. If they mingled with the throng below, Mr. Bolton might search for them in vain. He was helpless to avert a calamity that he himself had wrought. It was he that had sent or inspired the messages that had resulted in this meeting.

Sea-coly knowing what he did, Meade ran out of the waiting room and dashed down the stairs. Reaching the street, he looked across Sixth avenue, and there were Bertha and George getting into a hansom. There was no way for him to stop them, but he rushed across the avenue as if all depended upon his haste. The hansom was well under way as he reached the foot of the "L" road station's stair on the up town side of the avenue. He leaped against the structure and gasped.

A hand was laid upon his shoulder, and he heard the voice of Mr. Bolton asking what in the name of all the fiends at once he was doing there.

"They've driven away in a hansom!" cried the excited young man. "Chase them!"

"Now, look here," said Bolton, restraining him. "If you think I'm going to believe any more of your lies, you don't know me. My daughter hasn't been here, and Hallett hasn't been here, and I can prove it. Look at this telegram. It was handed to me just as I rushed out of the office, but I forgot to open it till a half minute ago."

Meade looked and read this: "Laura telegraphs me it 1:30, same place. Bertha left before message arrived. Meet her at 12 and tell her."

It was signed by Mrs. Bolton. "So, you see," said the stern parent, "Bertha had no reason to be here at 1:30, and, of course, Hallett wouldn't have been. Meade, I begin to see through you. You're a jealous jackass! And I had picked you for my son-in-law! The thought makes me modest. I reckon Bertha couldn't have done worse. It'll be just like me to let her suit herself after this experience, and if she wants George Hallett, why, by the jumping jingo, she shall have him!"

Commodore Cyrus Green, in command of the trim and swift little sloopentine Mokihana, 6 tons register, is again in pillikia. Recently this little bark served a term on the reef, but the other day the ship's cook took a crowbar and hiked her off, and the commodore bailed her out.

Last Sunday morning, Commodore Green boarded her and started to the Paris Exposition. He laid his course nor' by nor' east two points to the east, and spread all sail to the favoring gale. Unfortunately, the ship's cook had left the crowbar lying west by nor' west of the binnacle in which swung the ship's compass. Now, in obedience to natural laws, the needle pointed toward the crowbar, and in obedience to the laws of navigation the Commodore steered by the needle, although the prow of his bark pointed full on Enos & Co's slaughter house. Soon she fetched up kerpunk against the government road where she now lies, a sad warning to marines who steer to the needle let the ships fall where they may. The Commodore says he will let her serve a term of three months on the reef this time, rather than pay her fine or bail her out again.

The Euterpe, which went on a reef at Kuuu, eight miles east of Kahului on Sunday, was rescued by the Fearless and towed to Honolulu, reaching there Tuesday evening. The vessel did not suffer much damage, but it was fortunate that she was towed off the reef as soon as she was, because within hour after the tug had rescued her, the trade wind came on to blow a gale, through which the Euterpe could not have survived for more than a few hours.

The Euterpe belongs to Hackfeld & Co., and left Newcastle on July 10, with coal for Kuanapali. She is an American ship of 1,197 tons register, commanded by Captain Sate. It is supposed that she will be detained at Honolulu pending the settlement of the salvage question. The enterprising tug Fearless has doubtless picked quite a plum.

Foreign mail is due in Honolulu today on the Doric, and on Wednesday on the Australia.
