

Self government continues to grow. As more and more of the financial responsibilities descends on their own shoulders, so more and more are the Marshallese tending to be aggressive about ideas, ways and means, and action to meet these responsibilities both financial and otherwise.

The millenium is not here, each atoll has its financial struggles, each has its own peculiar problems, but the work of the District Council, particularly in gathering together and exchanging ideas for the successful solution of these problems, is doing much for the Marshallese in overcoming their growing pains.
