Dinner To Naval Officers Of Two Nations One Of Most Successful Maui Chamber Of Commerce Has Had

Visitors Are Shown Over Island And Are Lavish In Praise Of Hospitality Beyond Expectations

As a fitting climax to a day of sight-seeing came the dinner and dance given by the Maui Chamber of Commerce to the visiting naval officers of the British light cruiser Cape Town and officers of the United States fleet that was in Kahului harbor at the Grand Hotel last night, one of the pleasantest affairs of the kind that Maui has ever known.

Day Of Sightseeing

Yesterday morning cars were at the entrance of Claudine Wharf awaiting the officers of the visiting cruiser, the cars manned generally by former British subjects. The guests were then hustled off in various directions on sight seeing trips, out through the cane fields and into the pineapple country. There were visits to the Puunene Mill which was running on the 1923 grind, and to the Haiku cannery. Some stopped at the Puunene Club for a swim or tennis and there were trips up Iao Valley and to other scenic points.

Meantime the men who had shore leave were taken aboard trains up to Haiku where they saw the delicious pines being "linned" and had the opportunity to sample great luscious slices. Returning they went to the Fair Grounds where numbers of the officers also went and there was played a soccer game. As was expected, the visitors won but the game was much more closely contested than had been expected, the score being 5 to 2 for the Cape Town team.

Jolly Social Evening

Before 7 o'clock cars began to roll up in front of the Grand Hotel and discharge their passengers and soon the lanai and lobby were a gay and animated sight. Mauitians, British naval officers and U. S. officers from the Sea Gull and the eight subs with her mingling together.

Within the dining room at the Wailuku end there draped two large flags of the two nations. At the end of the room was a long table. To its left were the musicians and to the right and Waihee of italeo, were numbers of smaller tables. There were places for 150 dinners and nearly that number were at table.

To the ears of the persons in the lobby and on the lanai came the sound of music from Eddie Tam's orchestra and the signal to enter the dining room was given, the guests having generally learned the location of their seats from a diagram in the lobby in advance.

Second Welcome Extended

Hardly had the fruit cocktail and soup been disposed of when J. J. Walsh, toastmaster, introduced Judge Case as the first speaker. He told a story of the composition of a little girl on automobiles which raised a laugh and then went into a more serious vein, once more welcoming the visitors and complimenting them on their splendid services to the world in the recent war. He prophesied peace for the future growing largely from the friendship of the two nations of the same blood and tongue.

Interspersed with the speeches were musical numbers, some Hawaiian numbers and dothors for dancing and numbers of the diners took advantage of the latter and left their seats to dance between courses.

British Commander Replies

Toastmaster Walsh next introduced Captain Jones of H. M. S. Cape Town who expressed for himself, his officers and crew their appreciation of the reception and entertainment that had been accorded them. He said as they were entering Kahului Harbor they saw the American flag floating from the mine-layer and knew when they saw that ship and the submarines they had met friends, for the officers of the two navies were friends before as well and during the late war. They were taken by surprise, he continued, when the reception committee of the Chamber of Commerce came alongside and then aboard, and surprise became astonishment when they were told of the program of entertainment laid out for them, for they had expected nothing of the kind.

Commander Welch Speaks

Next of the speakers was Commander Welch of the U. S. Navy. Commander Welch spoke of the hospitality always extended to members of the American Navy when in port at Kahului, said officers with him knew it even better than he for this was only his second visit to Maui and he had been to no other islands port except Honolulu, but he had found all the good things his brother officers had told him of Maui confirmed and he subscribed to the Maui motto, "Maui no ka oi." He was certain that the British officers would carry away the same impression. He dealt briefly on the friendly relations between the two countries and their navies.

N. K. Otsuka next spoke and paid tribute to the prowess shown by the British navy and its service to the world in the war. He commented on the friendly relations between the country of his birth, that of his residence and the nation of the visitors. He touched on the advantage to be secured by all from such friendly intercourse as was brought about by the visit and the satisfaction that should be felt from it.

J. H. Gray, secretary of the Chamber, was the last speaker. He commented on the family and blood relationship of the people of the two nations, and said that though they had separated more than a century ago they had been brought together once more. There had been differences in the past. In 1812 they had fought but the positions of the two nations on the point of difference at that time had now been revised. Then the United States contended against the British claim to right of search and seizure. Now the United States was contending for the right of search and seizure and the Britons were opposing, only in 1812, it was search for and the seizure of men and now it was search for and seizure of spirits.

He invited the visitors to join the "Come Back Club" of which he said Honolulu had no monopoly.

The toastmaster then announced that all would rise and "Aloha Oe" would be sung and then the floor cleared for dancing.

Jolly Dance Follows

At first during the dinner the visitors from the Cape Town had held back to some extent from dancing fearing a difference in the style of dance of the two countries but more and more of them joined the dances between courses and after the tables had been removed from the dining room all entered into the spirit of the occasion and had a jolly evening of it.

The committee in charge of the dinner was D. C. Lindsay, H. K. Duncan and H. B. Penhallow.

Hungarian Artist To Delight Maui Folk With Rare Talents

From Honolulu where he has been one of the sensations of the season comes Laszlo Schwartz to Maui next week to be heard and seen at the various theaters of the Maui circuit. He will open at Puunene on Tuesday and will be heard in Wailuku on Wednesday.

Laszlo Schwartz has a rare combination of talents which add interest and zest to his performances. He is a violinist, a composer of music, an author, a composer, a lecturer and a cartoonist. Usually when a person possesses one of such talents he is satisfied, with two of them he is a success but when so many are combined he becomes a marvel.

In his programs in Honolulu the Hungarian artist has combined violin numbers with discourses which he has illustrated with comic cartoons.

There were not so many of the British tars present as had been expected but numbers of the Yankee gobs dropped in and the spirited game was much enjoyed.

This afternoon the soccer game will be between two teams from off the Cape Town, old rivals, and will be played on the Wailuku grounds instead of at Bahului. Game to be called at 4 o'clock.

There will be no entertainment this evening as it was not found practicable to stage boxing and wrestling as expected.

(ASSOCIATED PRESS) WICHITA, Kas., Dec. 20.—Former Secretary of the Navy Daniels in a speech delivered here last night said that the Harding naval disarmament conference was a failure, because England and Japan got the better of the United States in the ship-scrapping compact by placing no restriction on the construction of light vessels and aircraft.

NEWS IN ADVERTISING

Quite as much time and attention is devoted to the writing of advertisement as to the news articles that appear in the newspapers. It would be better to say in the "other news articles" for advertisements are essentially news. They contain just as much pit and meat news as do the other columns of the newspaper. If the space is being adequately and properly used the advertisement tells a "story," conveys its message.

In the preparation of an advertisement the first requisite is to make it stand out so as to catch the eye. This may be done through display lines, the larger type used, through illustrations, "cuts" or through a combination of both.

The writer of a news story wants to have it read and so he takes care as to its "leading up" and the head writer uses words to catch the attention and the story is expected to hold it. So with the display advertisement but its heading or display line may differ from that of the news story. The best news head is the one that tells the first of a story in a few words. The ad writer need not start his advertisement with anything that has a direct bearing on his subject matter if he does not wish to.

In advertising, however, more than in news display, there enters the factor of workmanship. No matter how well written be an advertisement it can be spoiled by poor work in the composing room. To write an attractive ad is an art and to set it into a type arrangement so that its attractiveness of wording and phraseology be at least maintained and if possible enhanced is an art.

Where one can get the best goods at the lowest price is news to the average reader more important than a battle in India, the sinking of a steamer in the Yellow Sea or even the sickness of a movie actor or the pending divorce of a screen star.

How he can save in gas consumption by his car and get more mileage out of the tires is interesting news to every motorist.

Where to get his or her clothes is or should be of equal interest as news to what other folk are wearing. When to get pure and wholesome groceries and other food stuffs is more interesting than the sudden illness of some person who is suffering from ptomaine poison.

A very large proportion of newspaper readers are aware of this and scan the display advertising columns of the paper with some degree of care, but the average merchant does not give half the attention to the story that is to be told in the space for which he pays as does the writer of a news story who is paid to fill the news columns. If the news writer is "sloppy" in his work, if the head writer is careless and shiftless they cannot long hold their places.

When the average advertiser comes to realize that it depends upon himself whether he gets results from his advertising, in getting proper dividends from his investment in publicity and the results of publicity, he will give the subject the attention which it deserves. Today such average man is prone to place blame on the medium he employs and not on his failure to present in clear, lucid and attractive terms the story that he has to tell the buying public. The failures at ad writing for themselves are the ones who lose faith in the power that advertising may be made.

The same man will protest vigorously if some project in which he is interested is not given the amount of news stories he thinks it should have, and yet he will not give the business projects he undertakes the space in advertising news that they must have to be really profitable.

NEW ATHLETIC ASSOCIATIONS

In the announcing that a meeting will be held in the Town Hall tomorrow night to consider the formation of an athletic association Wailuku is taken a step which it is hoped will lead to the betterment of conditions all through the world of athletics in Maui. It is proper that Wailuku, largest in population of any of the communities of the Island should make the first move in that direction and the results will be watched by all other sections.

There are arguments aplenty for the forming of such associations in all directions and there are some arguments that are presented against the proposal. It is argued there will not be the keen rivalry between two clubs from the same organization that there would be from two clubs the members of which are in no wise connected up or identified with one another. Other arguments are presented in answer.

In the view of the writer Wailuku as well as the other districts of Maui will benefit by strong central organizations. Wailuku tried out a number of clubs in baseball last season and the result was disastrous to the district and to interest in the game. For a time the Waes and the Alerts were keen rivals in sport but in most branches of it both of those organizations have ceased to function. With a strong association in Wailuku there could be teams organized within the association with as healthy a rivalry between them as formerly existed between the Waes and the Alerts.

But in the proposal to form such an organization it must be kept in mind that it is designed for certain well-defined purposes and is not to conflict with any of the plans and purposes of the organization best fitted to promote sports on Maui, the Fair and Racing Association.

Fair To Officials

(Contributed)

There has been so much squabbling and criticism at the football grounds this year that I sort of expected the sports committee to come forward with some kind of protection for the officials appointed by them. I do not want you to feel, however, that the ensuing is aimed at the sports committee for non-action. I merely want to pen a few words to the public through your columns—in defense of the referee.

Football has so many appealing features that it is developing into America's biggest and best sport. The gridiron game has its unique features, also, and one of them is that the general mass of spectators is ignorant of the rules. Less is known about football rules and the inside of the game than any other big American sport. It is rather surprising, sometimes, to think that such large crowds will turn out to see a game that the majority knows little about. After perusing some football dope by "Ernie" Quigley, a prominent American football referee, I find this true.

"Take baseball, for instance. The base runner is being run down between two bases. He evades one of the basemen and gets safely to the bag, but is called out for running out of line.

Boxing rules are known to the letter, almost, by every kid in the country. When one contestant is disqualified the majority are able to tell the reason without a moment's thought.

On the football field, however, a forward pass may be thrown and the play appears successfully executed. The whistle of the referee is blown, the ball is brought back and the team in possession penalized a down. It is safe to say that less than two per cent of the spectators are able to quote the rule that was violated. In many instances the players, who make a more or less careful study of the game, are not even "wised up" themselves. This starts a row either on the field or in the bleachers, and the referee bears the brunt of the remarks thrown out by the uninformed masses who "know how it should be done."

When the time comes that the football rules are familiar to the ordinary layman and when the fine points of the game are universally known, it will be impossible to accommodate the crowds.

Football in its fine points is more or less mysterious, not because it is a highly complicated game, but because the rules are so hazily worded and so many changes are made from year to year, that it almost takes a corporation lawyer to get clear on the rule book.

Referee Quigley schools in his umpire work with Charlie Moran, coach of the famous Center College teams whose plays are all "just within the law." It is claimed that these two men spend most of their summer evenings, many times until early morning, going over the changes in the rules and figuring out just what they mean.

When two football experts have to go to all that time and trouble to get straight on the legal end of the game is it any puzzle why the ordinary fan, who sees games once a week, half a dozen times a year, and from a great distance, is satisfied with a rudimentary knowledge of what is taking place on the field?

After all, however, the fan knows that the main point is to get the ball over the goal line, and that's where the interesting work comes in. I have had occasion in Maui to witness several polo games, the only ones I have ever seen. I did not, nor do I now, understand the game. It seemed, however, that the main thing was to get the ball between the goal posts. The referee, or umpire or whatever the name of the officials is, made several rulings. I did not know their purport. Luckily I had friends competing on both teams, and that the game was one of exhibition, for should I have jumped up with the cry that the referee was a "dumbbell" and did not "know the game," I surely would have been shown the gate.

The football season is about finished now. Basketball has started. Later we will have field day, swimming and baseball competition. Please try to remember that a referee knows his business. He may err, that is human, but he is there to make that sport all that it stands for. Players and spectators are only good sportsmen when they abide by the referee's decisions and lend him their support. Please remember the referee plays the hardest game on the field.

Yours in defense of the referee of the future,

R. O. HUMPHREY.

Venus, Not Mars, Held Likely Life Source

BOSTON, (By A. P. Mail).—The existence of life on the planet Venus may be considered highly probable, Dr. Barlow Shapley, director of the Harvard Observatory, said in a recent lecture here. He added that the question of life on Mars was controversial, but that its small mass and its great distance from the sun counted heavily against the probability of life there.

"Venus," he said, "is comparable to the earth in many ways and if, as is likely, living organisms develop wherever conditions are suitable over a sufficient interval of time, then it may be considered that life on Venus is highly probable. On no other bodies in the solar system, however, are conditions at all favorable for the existence of protoplasm."

Dr. Shapley said that accepting the tidal evolution theory of a planetary system, even for stars otherwise favorably located, an encounter of just the right sort with another star was necessary for the birth of a planetary system.

"And once such a family is born," he continued, "other stars must not disturb the family, and the star's light intensity must remain essentially uniform for the enormous interval of time required for the crustal evolution which must precede animate origins.

"Nevertheless, it appears probable that among the thousands of millions of stars there are here and there planets that conform to the requirements. Although the animal man is probably not duplicated in the universe, there are doubtless numerous other living earths, and the chance that their life phenomena surpass in intensity and 'highness' those on the earth is as good as the chance that they fall below our level."

The search for habitable worlds, he said, was largely a search for conditions suitable for the existence of water in a liquid form. This, he added, was an absolute necessity for the development of life such as that on the earth, and a definite chemical constitution for air, land and water also was necessary. A planet's days and nights, therefore, must not be so long as to prevent the existence of water in a liquid form.

"It seems certain," he said, "that some exists on Mars at times in a liquid form. The average astronomical opinion is that low forms of organisms may exist on Mars, that high forms are very improbable, and that beings physically comparable with man are absolutely impossible."
