SLINGS AND ARROWS

By HUGH CONWAY. Author of "Called Back," "Dark Days," "A Family Affair," Etc.

CHAPTER X.

"IT HAS BEEN A DREAM, LET US FORGET IT." Curious as it may seem, I pressed Grant no more to make a premature revelation of the mystery. His warning words, his solemn assertion that I had nothing to hope for, when joined to the remembrance of Viola's grief and persistence in seeking to avoid me, had exercised a great effect upon me; so great that I began to dread the promised disclosure. Until it was made, I could at least tell myself that some day matters would come right. The look I had seen the last in Viola's eyes haunted me day and night. The last words I had heard her speak, "Julian, farewell!" rang in my ears. Both look and words told me that she loved me, but told me that hopeless misery was to be our lot. No wonder I began to wish to postpone the knowledge of the worst!

We went to an hotel in London. I was moodily and miserably cheerful in company with the man to whom I now clung as for support and strength. Somehow, Eustace Grant seemed to be the only creature to whom I could turn in my trouble for sympathy and aid. He was very good to me in those days. He was more than a friend more than a brother. But, in spite of the compassion which I knew he felt for me, no word which encouraged the faintest hope passed his lips. Sympathy is precious, but I wanted hope.

The days went by until I guessed that Viola's departure must be near at hand. I grew nervous and sleepless. With thoughts of flying back to Grant and seeing her once more shot through my mind. To see her, touch even her hand once more, to be once again the fatal secret which I had by now brought myself to believe would part us forever.

"When does she sail?" I asked Grant abruptly one night. "The day after to-morrow." "From where?" "From Havre."

"In forty-eight hours she would be gone. In forty-eight hours I should know why she had left me." "Eustace," I said, "before I learn what there is to learn, there is something I should like to do. Viola is my wife. Whether she has acted rightly or wrongly, I shall soon know; but I must make some provision for her future." "Yes," said Grant, "that you should most certainly do."

"Come with me to my solicitor's to-morrow. I will give him instructions." Grant nodded, so I wrote at once and made the appointment. I resolved to do all I had supposed doing before Viola left. By this act I could at least show her that whatever the pending revelation might be, I loved and trusted her. I told Grant of my intentions, and wondered he expressed so little surprise at what, under the circumstances, might be well called general, if not audacious.

"It will be just as fair," he said quietly. "Do it, as you suggest, at once." The next afternoon found us at my solicitor's. The large tin box, labeled "Julian Lorraine, Esq.," was pulled down, dusted and opened. The notes which, two years ago, had been taken respecting the settlements were looked up and produced. It was arranged that Grant should be one trustee; and my solicitor, in whom I put great faith, the other. All was to be done with as little delay as possible. I smiled sadly, perhaps bitterly, as I thought it was to be done for the sake of one who was eager to put thousands of miles between us.

I was looking through some papers, among which I found one indorsed "Copy of Julian Lorraine's will." I drew it out, opened it and held it toward Grant. "See," I said, "there is my title to all I possess. What a difference those few lines made to me at the time! Now, little good, after all, they have done me!"

"Shorter with I ever read, Mr. Grant," said the solicitor. "If every one made no simple will as that, lawyers would starve." Grant, without much about of interest, took the paper in his hand and ran his eye over it. Suddenly he stopped short, and stared at it like one who sees a ghost. Never before had I seen a man's face and bearing so changed in a single second. I was positively frightened.

"What is the matter?" I cried. He turned to the solicitor. "Will you leave us alone for one minute?" he said; "only one minute!" The solicitor looked surprised at the brusque request; but, nevertheless, courteously vacated the office.

Grant seized my arm with a grip of iron. "What does it mean—this?" he asked, in a voice full of excitement. As he spoke, he laid his forefinger on the words "adopted son!" "Mean! It is English. It means what it says."

"You are not that man's son!"

"No more than you are. I have always passed as such, and never troubled to correct the error. Perhaps, as my origin is a humble one, I was admitted to do so, added, with a faint laugh. He took no notice of my self-deprecation. "Tell me all about yourself—as short as possible, but pass over nothing." So in a few words I told him the story, which, years ago, Julian Lorraine had told me. How I was born in mid-ocean, and in a curious way established some sort of claim on Mr. Lorraine. My tale was but half finished when Grant left me, and I heard him in the outer office shouting for telegraph forms in a way which seemed to indicate our check. He wrote two messages and I threw down a sovereign and asked for some one to go at once to the telegraph office. Then he seized me by the arm. "Come!" he cried; "all that trash—meaning the business papers—can wait. Come with me." He swept me out of the office like a whirlwind, down the stairs into the street. He shouted for a cab, and in a moment we were tearing at full speed toward our hotel. Had I not guessed that something of the sort, something concerning my own fate lay under his excitement, I should have thought that Eustace Grant had suddenly gone mad. No; I knew that he had made some discovery which wrought a great change in everything.

"What is it? Tell me," I said. "I cannot. I cannot speak. Wait one minute." "Tell me that it means good to Viola and to me." He grasped my hand. "Julian," he said, "it means everything."

I sank back speechless. For a minute or two I was willing to rest content with this bold assertion and ask no more questions. I said no more until we reached the hotel. Grant carelessly threw money to the cabman, passed his arm through mine, and led me to our sitting-room at a rate which made us the object of all eyes. There, he grasped both my hands and shook them vigorously. Then he left me.

In a minute he was back again. He held two letters in his hand. He gave me one, a letter which on her death bed Viola's mother told me to give her daughter on her twenty-first birthday. Your wife read it in Mr. Monk's office while she was waiting for you and she was talking to Mr. Monk. When you read it, picture her feelings, and you will understand everything."

Grant turned away and left me alone with the letters. "Which should I open first, Viola's, of course. Had I thought it might be, it would contain some word of love which would be precious to me. I kissed it and tore it open. Here it is!"

"Dearer—You will read this, knowing all. Had we not met—had you ever loved me faithless to you, I could have carried the dreadful secret to the grave, and you at least might one day have found yourself happy again. You have forced the truth from me, and the truth shows you that this letter is an eternal farewell. At times I thought, when years and years have passed, we might meet again. Dearest, it can never be. Even that hope is denied us. Julian, fate has been cruel, and seems ever crueler now that you must share the sorrow and the shame. Farewell."

I laid the letter on the table and opened the second packet. Another letter in a woman's writing, two two long narrow strips of paper. I read the letter.

"MY DAUGHTER—If I am dead, this will be given you on your twenty-first birthday. The name under which I pass is not my own. I am the wife—you are the daughter of Julian Lorraine, of Heralst Abbey, Somersetshire. How he treated me, why I left him, are matters upon which I need not speak. He was a fiend in human shape. I shall never see him again. He does not love me. Even that I am alive or dead, I tell you this, not that you may seek him and claim the right of a daughter, but that you may shun and avoid any one bearing his wicked name. He is rich, but riches do not bring happiness. Give your own sweet life, marry a good honest man, and let your true name, or the relationship you bear to the man who so cruelly wronged me, never pass your lips. If ever you feel tempted to go to this man and say, 'I am your daughter,' think of me and the years of suffering he has caused me. Let him die without knowing he has a child so fair and loving as yourself. Your affectionate mother, "MARGARET LORRAINE."

The slips of paper were certificates—one of the marriage of Julian Lorraine and Margaret, the other of the birth of Viola. Now I know all—I rested still and pictured my poor girl's unspoken horror at the thought of her father, and learned that her husband was her father's son by what she supposed was a former wife. I seemed to see her struck down in the first flush of her wedded happiness, even as I had been struck down. I seemed to see her into her thoughts, to feel that it was her possible she could meet me again. I could hear her agonized entreaties to Grant to bear her away and hide her from me. I could understand now why she took no steps to clear her name in my eyes. How she even wished me to think her perjured and faithless, so long as the secret could be kept from me—so long as I did not suffer as she suffered. Yet I could understand what, rightly or wrongly, she and Grant had striven to do for my sake!

On what a chance a life turns! Why had I never told Viola the story of my birth and strange adoption? Why had I never told Grant? It would have cleared matters in a second.

Strange to say, it had never occurred to me to mention it either of them. After all I had succeeded to my reputed father's wealth, my position was so assured—it seemed to me so natural to be thought and called the dead man's son—that in sober truth my real origin had all but faded from my mind. For years I had scarcely given it a thought. But I ground my teeth now, as I reflected how a simple chance might have made me speak, and so saved my wife and myself from more than two years of misery!

Then the idea came to me that every moment which elapsed before Viola learned the news was a moment of sorrow to her. I sprung to my feet and went in search of Grant. Good fellow! I found he had already packed his portmanteau, and was busily engaged on his train. "You make haste we shall just catch the Southampton train," he said. "I thanked him by a look. I tossed things into my portmanteau higgledy-niggledy, and in three minutes we were on our way back to France. We were in plenty of time. Indeed, as the boat did not leave Southampton until nearly midnight, we might have waited for a later train. It was latter as it was. Although starting from London at once meant pacing for hours the quay at Southampton, I had the satisfaction of being so many miles nearer to Viola. [To be Continued.]

"Rest and change are good for people," said the wife as the rose in the night to rife her husband's pockets. "I have had a rest, and now I think I'll have a little change."

WEDNESDAY... APRIL 21, 1886.

The public are hereby notified that the entire subscription and delivery lists of the DAILY HONOLULU PRESS for Honolulu have been placed in the hands of Mr. A. M. Mellis, who is hereby authorized to collect all sums for subscriptions now due this paper, or that may become due after this date.

Hon. Frank Pahia has been appointed Sheriff of Hawaii vice J. L. Kauluko, now Postmaster General. The prima facie evidence of fitness for office, so far as we know, is his recent election on the Government ticket as Representative from Hilo.

Mr. Loo Sam Shin, opposite the White House on Nuuanu street, has displayed the most commendable generosity since the fire. His charitable donations have certainly been unequalled, if the amount of his worldly goods is taken into consideration.

It is announced that the Privy Council of State have passed a resolution appropriating the sum of ten thousand dollars from the Government Treasury to be used for the relief of the sufferers of the late fire.

Two suggestions of a more or less practical nature, concerning the burnt district of Honolulu, have been put forth by prominent citizens. One is, that the property owners of the district pool their interests and form a large joint stock company, taking shares for their proportionate allotments.

At the published request of the President of the Board of Health we have carefully read Chapter III. of the Session Laws of 1880. The title of the act is misleading. It states that the act is "to provide for the Sanitary Condition of Dwelling Houses," which would naturally be taken to apply to all dwelling houses.

ties, which can only be determined by an interpretation of the sections of the act itself to be those dwellings used and occupied "for lodgers or contract laborers." The first four sections of the act are specially applied to dwellings used for lodging houses and to the conduct of lodging house keepers and the employers of laborers.

KEINOHOOMANAWANUI AND KALELEALUAKA. BY H.

It seemed that while the two friends were telling each other of their desires, one of the King's warriors passed by their house and overheard them talking, which conversation was reported to the King by the warrior, and it so incensed the King that he gave orders to have the men brought down and slain; but his great Kahuna, however, interposed and said, "No; rather let the men live, for possibly in time of need they may render you such services as will more than repay you for whatever you may do for them."

On the evening of the same day, as the sun was descending beyond the Kaala mountains, the King dispatched a messenger to tell Keinohoomanawanui and his companion that he was desirous of having an interview with them.

As they neared the King's Palace they could perceive that two new houses had been built, and that an unaround, usually large crowd of men were bustling here and there in the front houses, while the women were in the rear houses making wreaths.

Being filled with vanity at the idea that the King should bestow on him such especial honors, he forgot in his hour of prosperity to invite his companion to share with him the food which had been bountifully supplied by the King, if not that, to at least take shelter under his roof until he was able to do for himself.

The King having seen Keinohoomanawanui to his house, returned and took Kalelealauka by the hand and led him to the new house. As they entered there was spread before them such a feast as Kalelealauka had never seen before; it fairly made his mouth water, while looking at the good things before him.

enough awa for two cups he commenced straining it and passed the bowl down to the Kahuna for his benediction, which being performed the bowls of awa were passed back. Taking one of the bowls the King put it to the mouth of Kalelealauka who drank it; the King drinking his own cup.

A Massachusetts man brought a jug of cider to the editor of his country weekly, and the knight of the quill immediately shut himself in and hung out a placard saying: "This is my busy day."—Burlington Free Press.

A photograph of the conflagration taken from the Bell Tower during its progress by J. H. Gonsalves, is now on exhibition in the window of Thrum's book store.

The Chinese generally regard the fire as the result of a deplorable accident, and the calamity resulting as to be endured without bitterness existing against the "cause."

All day the debris was giving forth feeble volumes of smoke, no flame being visible. At 9:45 A. M., a slight shower commenced which greatly contributed to the result.

About three hundred stores were consumed by the fire, the stock in trade from various estimates aggregating about $500,000. Most of the merchants will resume trade.

Sealed tenders for supplying the Queen's Hospital with milk for one year will be received at the office of N. A. Schaefer up to twelve o'clock noon on Saturday, the 24th inst.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Kapena took place from St. Andrew's Cathedral at four o'clock yesterday afternoon. The services were very impressive, and the funeral was followed to Kawaihaoho Cemetery, where the remains were interred, by a large number of friends and acquaintances of the deceased lady.

A young man rooming at Oeding's was reading last night while lying on his bed. He soon became aware of more light than he had arranged for. Turning his languid gaze to the right, it took him but a short time to realize that the sheet and mattress were afire. Being a newspaper man and therefore possessed of great presence of mind, he rose, seized a blanket, and soon smothered the blaze. A pitcher of water judiciously applied soon settled the mattress. The literary youth then went to bed and calmly resumed his reading.

The following notice appears on Oat's Bulletin Board:

Taken by Mistake—From in front of the Pacific Navigation Co.'s Office, on the night of the fire, a box of shoe-makers' tools. The finder will be lastingly rewarded by leaving it at the Sailors' Home.

The writer waxes funny over a man losing his wul. Heel not flourish who endeavors to fox over such notices. There is no ex-shoes for at-tacks of this character. Its sole right, perhaps, but we ex-pegged to waxed-end the hand of sympathy to misfortune. There is no half-soul about us. Sole leather whiz.

A large crowd was assembled in front of the Station House at two o'clock yesterday afternoon. Inquiry developed that some officers had taken a Chinaman and a native boy inside. It appears the boy found some money in the ruins of a store burned down during the late "unpleasantness." The aforesaid to-wit Chinaman who does up his hair at the back similar to the ladies, but shaves off his bangs, this Chinaman, who comes from a race whose history antedates the oldest traditions of common nations by about two thousand years, yes, this Celestial whose tongue wears out the organs of speech, and whose written characters renders a man color blind, did, with malice prepense, con-trary to the peace and dignity of this Kingdom, and in defiance of all international law, assault, thump, whack and "smiffigate" that boy "too nuchee." The boy soon emerged from the Station House and the crowd whooped for joy. It is presumed he had the money, too, as he was followed by an admiring train, who urged him to hire a hall, run for the Legislature, etc., etc. The retinue will stick to him while the coin lasts. [See the History of the World—any page.]

They say: That the titles of the laws passed by the next Legislature should be changed from "be it enacted" to "be it suggested;" that some of the native scrapers among the ruins made a find yesterday; that another burnt safe was carted away last evening; that some more Government appointments are to be made soon; that the taxpayers all hope Mr. K., the new official, will forget his old tricks; that the scene of the fire has been visited by ten thousand people since Sunday last; that the lei makers have again taken up their old quarters at the corner of Hotel and Nuuanu streets; that the Governor visited the Satellite yesterday morning; that the fire will ultimately be a great blessing to Honolulu; that the Chinese are talking of organizing another fire company; that the Legislature ought to act on a suggestion, to be made in the Advertiser, by the "great Suggester," and increase the appropriation for the Honolulu Fire Department; that the Bethel congregation will either meet in the Lyceum or in the Y. M. C. A. Hall; that the change of the time in opening of the Post Office is the first retrogressive action of the new official; that it will cause the delay of a day before workmen can get their mail; that the contemplated trip of royalty to San Francisco has more significance than it shows on the outside; that the list of rent collections will be small next month; and that a bill for extending the fire limit has already been drawn.

An "Uncle Tom's Cabin" troupe was kicked off the stage by its donkeys the other day before the audience could interfere. Donkeys and critics have much in common, but the former are the more effective for good. —Binghamton Republican.
