A Visit to Maui—No. 3.
[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

While sitting, solitary in my room between 11 and 12 o'clock the other night, "poring over some long-forgotten lore," that I had unearthed from the musty shelves of my library, I was suddenly startled by a low, muffled, but distinctly metallic hammer, peeling through the silence of the night. The unusual (to me) hour of ringing a bell, and the short, sharp, earnest jerk with which it was rung, could certainly mean nothing but "fire! fire! fire!" and, awakening the household, I rushed out of doors expecting to see Waikiki mills in a blaze. But I saw nothing, only the misty moonlight, sleeping in beauty on mountain, low and level plain and wide-stretched ocean, and heard nothing for the bell had ceased its clangor. In the morning I learned that it was simply the previously understood call for a relay of night laborers to turn out. That the mill and crop of field of cane is ready to be taken off, it is necessary to do it as expeditiously as possible, and the mill is kept grinding night and day. The gang of laborers who come down at midnight last night, were relieved by a fresh gang, and thus the work goes continually forward.

THE HUGO IRON ROLLERS
That grind the cane at Waikiki mills are moved by a large undershot water-wheel. It is an interesting sight to watch the process of grinding. The mill is built on a hillside and the water comes down in a stream, a continuous stream, slowly passing on within the clutch of the deliberately revolving rollers of iron and comes out on the other side and passes off into the drying yard below. The water is so arranged that a drop of water falls from the rollers at a distance of about 100 feet from the rollers, and the water is so arranged that it falls at a distance of about 100 feet from the rollers, and the water is so arranged that it falls at a distance of about 100 feet from the rollers.

WHERE THE SUGAR IS MANUFACTURED.
We were politely shown and told us by the manager, Mr. Wilford. Much of the costly machinery is new, including a vacuum pan and all the latest improvements in the art, and it is believed that this plantation now produces more sugar than any other in the island. The arrangements of the interior of the large house

THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT
For the island of Maui ought by all means to be located at Waikiki. Lahaia has no claim whatever to be continued as such, beyond the fact that a court house and "custom-house" (save the mark) was built there once on a time when the town was supposed to possess some importance. Lahaia has gone, never to return. Its present claims for attention are notably contained in the fact that it has two sugar mills, located there—positively nothing more. While Waikiki has four large and thriving plantations within its borders, and it is the natural and obvious center of trade and commerce for all Maui. There is no doubt of this, and it is a fact, where the foreign population will build houses and settle permanently, as they have already begun to do. The time will soon come when that necessary adjunct to all great commercial towns will manifest itself—perhaps by coming itself will prove its own necessity—the country newspaper. In many a town in the Western States, of America, a vast waste of pretensions than Waikiki, the establishment of the press is one of the first things thought of.

THE PROPOSED CHANGE IN THE LAW, providing for one term of the Circuit Court, has been the subject of much discussion in the Legislature, was but an imperatively needed measure. In looking over the list of jurors drawn for the term of Court, it will be seen that out of the entire panel, but only one juror is a resident on the Lahaina side, the remainder come from Waikiki and East Maui, and are compelled to ride some twenty to thirty miles to the court house, and to meet one or two jurors who live in Lahaina. The large majority of the cases to be tried are from this side, and the expense of transporting witnesses is an item of considerable importance. It is, therefore, a matter of some importance, to have a court house on the Lahaina side, and the remainder come from Waikiki and East Maui, and are compelled to ride some twenty to thirty miles to the court house, and to meet one or two jurors who live in Lahaina.

ON THE ROAD TO MAKAWAO.
After leaving Waikiki, you cross the sandy isthmus which connects the two islands of East and West Maui. This isthmus is of comparatively recent formation—though that may mean a good many thousands of years old—and is formed by the action of sea and wind. Long ridges or dunes of beach stretch across the interval, in some places hardened into stone, covered with a scanty growth of grass at this season, and interspersed with ponds of brackish water, where wild ducks abound. From the isthmus upward over a smooth road, gradually ascending, you pass across the wide, grassy plain known as "the Commons." These stretch far and wide on either hand, and are composed of equally as deep and rich soil as the sugar lands of Waikiki, and capable, throughout their extent of maintaining a dozen mills—but there is no water to be had for irrigation. Some readers may perhaps remember a petition presented during the late session by one of the members for Waikiki, and rather feebly argued, bringing to the notice of the Legislature the fact that the great extent of these valuable lands now lying idle, and the wealth that would result to the country could they be made available for the cultivation of sugar, by the introduction of water from the mountain. The subject was referred to the Minister of the Interior, who reported that it would cost at least $200,000 to carry out the project of bringing the water which flows from the mountain to the sugar lands of Haleakala, down on to these plains. The amount of money mentioned (a rough guess it was, too) was so large, that further consideration of the matter was effectively "bluffed off," and it was heard of no more during the session. But suppose it was to cost $200,000? What comparison would the results be to the expenditure of the same amount of money for that object, near to the outlay of $110,000 for the Honolulu hotel; and which of the two enterprises would prove the most profitable for the country at large? The answer is, that the return to the Treasury? A low estimate places the number of acres of these now waste lands at 30,000; and with the water brought down to them, twenty-five dollars an acre would be an extremely low price, and purchasers would flock thither. Government is the only owner in that direction. Why waste $200,000 to carry out a project which would return the money to the Treasury?
