WEDNESDAY - June 10th.

THE ELEVENTH OF JUNE.

To-morrow, the 11th of June, is one of the days set apart by the Hawaiian Government as a national holiday, in commemoration of the birthday of Kamehameha I. Founded originally by Kamehameha V., that monarch selected this particular day as being the time of the year when holidays are infrequent. His own birthday fell on the 11th of December, and, during his lifetime, was duly celebrated. Kamehameha V., like all the kings who have sat upon the throne of the Hawaiian Kingdom, was fond of horses, and when, in 1872, the 11th of June was first proclaimed as a public holiday; the day was celebrated by races, which took place on the Kulakakua plains, at that time bare of trees and unfenced.

The day was a fine one, and at least ten thousand people assembled to witness the races, which were spiritedly contested. All the horses entered for that day's sport were of Hawaiian stock, with the exception of two trotters, and a glance at the time made shows that it was good.

Since that period the quality of the horse stock in the Kingdom has steadily advanced, until to-morrow's sports will bring out a display of horse flesh of which any country might be proud. Nor will the display of good stock be confined solely to the race track. There are many horses now only driven before family carriages, or ridden by gentlemen for exercise and recreation, which have a fair lineage, and are good specimens of the equine race.

This country is well adapted, by its conditions of soil and climate, to the raising of horse stock. We have large areas of land on our mountain sides, above the line where tropical or sub-tropical vegetation grows, that are splendid grazing tracts, and it is on these extensive table lands that stock of all kinds, cattle as well as horses, can be, and to some degree now are, raised with profit and pleasure.

There is no good reason why the Hawaiian Islands should not boast of stock farms from which the Pacific slope could be supplied with high grade animals, and we are of the opinion that such farms will eventually be located on Hawaii and Maui.

The setting apart of one of the annual holidays that we enjoy here to racing is, we think, a good thing. It may be that there are features connected with the race-course here, as well as elsewhere, that are objectionable. It may be that the opportunity offered to win or lose money there is greater than elsewhere; but we can congratulate ourselves that the management of our racing festivals is in the hands of gentlemen who do not permit anything like the swindling schemes that elsewhere disgrace race-courses, to be carried out here.

The owners of the horses themselves are men whom we all know as ardent lovers of those noble animals; men who have carefully bred the horses they allow to run, and who contest the races with their horses more for the purpose of testing the superiority of the breeds they foster than for the winning of a "purse" or a "cup."

There are none of the petty gambling adjuncts to our race track at Kapiolani Park that are to be found elsewhere. Our people assemble to witness fair and honest contests between horses, and one and all must feel that the sight of splendidly groomed, high mettled animals speeding around the track, displaying their beautiful proportions and magnificent training, is as harmless to the spectator as any exhibition of muscular strength and activity can be.

It is a good thing to join in the mingling cheers with which the winning horse is greeted as he flashes past the judges' stand. The animal feels the applause in every nerve and fiber of his elegant frame, and is amply repaid for the effort he has made to please his lord and masterman, and those who have carefully trained the horses for the supreme effort they have made, have the satisfaction of knowing that, winner or loser, their horses are better animals than they would have been if not prepared for the struggle, and that the good that is in them will show itself in their descendants for all time to come.

THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S FAIR

On Saturday the third annual Fair of the Royal Hawaiian Agricultural Society will be held at Kapiolani Park. The entries up to the present hour are reported to be far from numerous, but this is nothing new, as the invariable rule with exhibitors appears to be to leave their entries to the last possible moment. It may be hoped, therefore, that there will be at least a good show of horse flesh (to which the prizes are of this year restricted), and that the public will demonstrate the interest it takes in everything that tends to develop the resources of the country by making Saturday afternoon a holiday, and Kapiolani Park the chosen picnic ground.

Whether the place at which the show is to be held be well or ill chosen; whether the determination to concentrate attention this year more particularly on the exhibition of horses be a wise or an unwise move, is not now worth discussing. Things are so arranged. Here is an attempt, however feeble, to interest the public in some of the most important industries of the country. Let not petty personal jealousies or the spirit of carping criticism induce anyone to "look this gift horse in the mouth." Take it for what it is, make the best of it, and go out to the park and patronize it. Send to the Fair any exhibit you can, and so give the Fair a pat on the back, which may encourage the Society to some bolder and loftier course in the future.

THE LONDON "Morning Post" of

May 19th has an editorial upon the death of the late Queen Dowager Emma, in which mention is made of the late Queen's failure "on two successive occasions to obtain the throne vacated by the death of her husband, Kamehameha V."

and gives as an important reason for such failure "the strong prejudices which the Hawaiians—in common, it must be confessed, with most nations, whether civilized or not—entertain for certain rules of descent which they reckon, contrary to our custom, from the maternal side. Queen Emma was partly American, and while no doubt she inherited many advantages of a personal character from that fact, it certainly militated against her social position in the eyes of the islanders." Such is the opinion of the "Post," and such is the measure of accuracy with which the personality of historical individuals a little outside the circle of those who control European destinies is described.

A very neat and complete barber shop has been opened in the building standing at the end of Union alley, by Mr. Cunha, proprietor of the Union Reading Parlors. All the appliances for an easy shave can be found in the new establishment.

THE FIGHT

Between Mitchell and Cleary in San Francisco.

A Put-up Job on Mitchell—Disagreement of the Referees—Five Thousand Spectators—Scientific Sparring.

The four round sparring match arranged between Charles Mitchell, of England, and Mike Cleary, took place in San Francisco, in the presence of fully five thousand spectators, at the Mechanics' Pavilion. After some exhibitions of pugilistic skill by "lesser lights," there was a tedious wait till nearly eleven o'clock, when the heroes of the night put in an appearance. Cleary appeared first, accompanied by Jack Dempsey, and he was immediately followed by Mitchell, who was escorted by the Knight of the Ring, Harry Maynard. After a further wait, during which it was found impossible to select a referee, it was decided to have two—Tom Chandler being selected to act on Mitchell's behalf, and, after much discussion and objection, Billy Jordan being Cleary's chosen champion.

THE FIRST ROUND.

When time was called, the crowd rushed and pushed forward to get a glimpse of the contestants, smashing down the benches and hanging over the railings of the gallery. At first they sparred cautiously, but Mitchell got in the first blow, striking Cleary on the sternum. Then they clinched and Mitchell rushed Cleary against the ropes. They broke away at the second order of a referee, and Cleary, following up, struck at Mitchell and hit him below the belt. Mitchell nodded pleasantly at Cleary and placed his right hand where Cleary's blow had taken effect. Cries of foul were made, but no attention was paid to them and the men put in a number of rattling blows, when time was called.

THE SECOND ROUND.

Began by careful and cautious boxing, with more or less "dancing," which ended by Mitchell giving his opponent several very hard blows, which were returned by Cleary as rapidly as they were received. It was as pretty a piece of sparring as any one could wish to see. Cleary hit Mitchell three times so rapidly that it was hard to tell where the blows were given, and this afforded the crowd a fine opportunity to give vent to their pent-up feelings. Accordingly they cheered and yelled themselves hoarse, and when the round ended the cheers were still continued.

THE THIRD ROUND.

Mitchell had blood-red spots on his right arm, and the bandages which covered his arm were also discolored from his opponent's nasal organ. There was a regularity in hitting, then clinching and breaking away continually. Mitchell made no effort to hit Cleary in the face; whenever he pushed out either hand it landed on Cleary's body. The latter did not return these blows, but generally got in his work on Mitchell's face. This caused many to believe that Mitchell was not trying to do his best. Mitchell could have ended the match in this round, if he had so wished. The round closed with heavy body blows, when Cleary was knocked against one of the posts.

THE FOURTH AND LAST.

Round was the most exciting, as the men went to work in earnest, blow following after blow while legs and arms worked simultaneously. Mitchell finally hit Cleary a blow which could be heard as far as the street door and knocked him against one of the posts. Then he stood still and waited for Cleary to come up again. Later Cleary hit at Mitchell, and the latter, in dodging the blow, slipped on to his left knee. The 5,000 simply went wild. Another second or two and Cleary went down. Then they got together and clinched, and were about to go at it again when time was called and the match was ended.

DECLARED A DRAW.

The "Chronicle" gives the following description of the closing scene: The principals, referees, timekeepers, policemen and others gathered around the stage. Jordan held up his hand, and, amid the confusion and turmoil was heard to say that the referees could not agree. He thought Cleary had won the match, and the other referee, Thomas Chandler, thought Mitchell had won it. The crowd yelled and booed, and Mitchell, coming to that portion of the platform overlooking the reporters' desk, asked for one more round. Captain Douglass objected, acting under instructions from Chief Crowley, who was present. The match was therefore declared a draw.

Death of Mr. H. Dean.

The news has been received here of the death, in the colonies, of Mr. H. Dean, whom many of our readers will remember as one of the kind and obliging patrons of the P. M. S. S. Zealandia, and also as the husband of the widow of the late Alexander Hutchison, of Hawaii. The lady so lately bereaved is a daughter of Judge Hardey, of Kauai, and we are informed that she intends to make the islands her future home.

PAINLESS DEATH.

METHODS OF EXTINGUISHING THE LIFE OF CONDEMNED CRIMINALS.

An Inquiry Which Ripened Civilization Suggests—Dr. Richardson's Experiments with Dogs—The Essence of the Sentence of Death.

(San Francisco Chronicle.)

For many years humane men have devoted attention to the subject of the present methods of extinguishing the life of condemned criminals. No one can tell how much pain is endured by a man who is hung, or guillotined, or garroted, but the prevailing impression is that the pain is severe in all these cases, and that it takes many minutes, which seem an age to the sufferer. It is not the design of the law that criminals shall be tortured, as well as deprived of life, hence various processes have been suggested by which life could be destroyed without the infliction of bodily suffering.

Ripening civilization has now suggested the inquiry whether, in all these cases, the desired object could not be attained by destroying life with painless anesthetics. An examination of the problem was undertaken in 1874 by the Medical Society of London, and a "home" for the destruction of surplus dogs and wounded animals was established at Mortlake by Dr. R. W. Richardson, F. R. S., which was carried on in successful operation today.

Four different anesthetics have been used—carbonic oxide, chloroform, bisulphide of carbon and coal gas. All produce narcotism as quickly as chloroform, and in every case the death which ensues is believed to be painless. Chloroform is certain to kill, if the fluid is diffused into a state of vapor and absorbed into the lungs. Even 1 per cent of the vapor in common air is not breathed without danger. In one out of every 2,500 cases where chloroform is administered in a surgical case, death ensues. It has one disadvantage—it is dear. But by mixing it with bisulphide of carbon, which is very cheap, it produces narcotism as quickly as chloroform, and involves less muscular disturbance. Common coal gas answers the purpose equally well. Its chief constituents are hydrogen and marsh gas, with some hydro-carbon and some carbonic oxide. By mixing 25 per cent of such gas with common air an atmosphere is produced in which an animal goes to sleep in two or three minutes, and dies asleep, apparently without pain, shortly afterward. It was observed that the heart ceased to beat about three minutes after sleep was established. Every one has read accounts of people who blew out the gas at night instead of turning it off, and were found dead in the morning. They probably died without a consciousness of suffocation. The difficulty with this agent is that its use involves considerable danger of explosions.

After a series of experiments Dr. Richardson came to the conclusion that for the case of the lower animals the best narcotic was carbonic oxide. He prepared it very simply by burning charcoal over a gas burner. The gas thus created was conducted into a reservoir, from which it was pumped in the quantity required into what he called the death chamber. As many as eighty or a hundred dogs were put to sleep at a time, and when everything was ready the gas was pumped in, with a slight admixture of chloroform and bisulphide of carbon. Some dogs fell asleep instantly, and probably at once. Others struggled against the tendency to sleep and remained awake two or three minutes. Few could resist as long as this, and in two or three minutes most of the dogs were found to fall asleep as quickly as dogs that resisted death much longer. Death was produced by asphyxiation, or sleep, which diffused widely from death by asphyxiation, which is death from deprivation of air. It was evidently painless. Dr. Richardson tried the process on sheep with equal success. They died as quietly as the dogs, and their flesh was uninjured. The method was adopted with the same result with pigs, calves and fowls. The cost of the death chamber and apparatus is estimated at from $200 to $750, and the cost of killing an animal when a number are executed together is about a cent.

We commend the subject to the consideration of butchers and of the agents of Mr. Richardson's society. Of all demoralizing influences the most potent is cruelty. It is hard to understand how humane instincts can survive a life spent in cutting the throats of brute creatures. It was not for nothing that our English ancestors refused to allow butchers to sit on juries. We must probably admit that a man may work at an abattoir and still retain a heart, as we cannot positively say that every dog-catcher must be a brute. But these callings certainly impose on those who follow them the onus of proving that they have still claims to humanity. The habitual sight of suffering, the constant spectacle of blood, the repeated contemplation of the death agony of poor creatures, which is death from deprivation of air, and it must require unusual strength of character to resist such an education in savagery. A reform which did away with these horrors would surely lessen the crop of crimes of violence.

There is one consideration which must not be forgotten. The essence of the sentence of death is not in the actual hanging of the culprit. It is in the previous mental agony. In this country the practice has long prevailed that a considerable period of time shall elapse between the sentence and execution. The underlying notion was to afford the condemned criminal an opportunity to prepare himself to meet his God. What effect it may have in this direction it is perhaps difficult to say. Laymen, at all events, do not take much stock in the religious professions of men who are going to be hanged. In our mother country the practice used to be different. It was thought best that the execution should follow the sentence as swiftly as possible, so as to strike terror into the minds of men who were inclined to crime. In France the criminal never knows when he is going to be executed till the executioner enters his cell, and bidding him rise, proceeds to pinion his arms. It is evident that, so far as a mental agony concerned, a substitution of an anesthetic for a hangman's rope would make no difference. The ever-present vision of death, the counting of the days, the horrid dreams at night, would be gone, just the same, whatever form of homicide was adopted. And it would be best so. It is not well that the doom of the murderer should be robbed of all its terror.

Fits and Easter Cards.

(New York World.)

There is a gentleman in this city, an extraordinarily eccentric person. He is a chaser all the year round. He is subject to epileptic fits. Whenever he feels one coming on he goes up the steps of the house he comes to, rings the bell, and waits for the help of the house. Lady comes smiling graciously into the parlor. "Excuse me, madame," says the gentleman, "I'm kinda subject to fits, and have been stopped in to have one." He then looks all over the parlor floor, makes horrible noises, frightens madame almost to death. Finishes the fit, gets up, bows himself out, goes home, and sends the lady a set of Easter cards with his compliments.

The "Anglican Church Chronicle."

The "Anglican Church Chronicle" for June is to hand, and as usual it is full of matters of interest to the church-going public, and to the members of the Anglican branch in particular. Much of its space is naturally devoted to the death and funeral of the late Queen Dowager Emma. The church work that is being done on the different islands is reported, and an earnest appeal is made to all good Christians to help forward the work of completing the new cathedral. The whole number is carefully edited and well repays perusal.

A New Home.

It will interest a large number of our island people to know that Mr. Samuel Nott, who lately gave up business here, and went with his family to the Coast, to know that he has settled down in a pleasant home at Los Gatos, a few miles south of San Jose, California. He has about twenty acres of good land, on which are a great number of fruit trees and vines. The land is irrigated by means of a large windmill, and Mr. Nott and his family seem to enjoy their new home and the climate very well.
