PROPRIETORS DAILY HONOLULU PRESS

ON THE BAY OF FUNDY.

Cruises of the Falcon Among the Blue Noses.

Beyond the Infinite Worriments of Land—in a Whirlpool—The Impending Town of St. John. The Crazy Tides.

For eight weeks I have cruised down east on the steam yacht Falcon, and in forty times we have had. There are eight of us—Rufus T. Bush, the owner, and his family of three and his guests, three ladies and two gentlemen besides. Then there is the captain and his officers and crew of nine more.

The Falcon is an iron vessel, 110 feet long, with a home on her deck finished and equipped with saloons and state-rooms in the luxurious manner of a Pullman palace car. She has more room where guests can be more thoroughly comfortable than in any other vessel than any other vessel in the clubs of New York harbor—more than Jay Gould's, Bennett's or Mr. Astor's. All the state-rooms and the elegant dining room and saloon look out on the water—not through port holes or bull's eyes, but from ample windows two feet by four.

The boat is at any time willing to face any sea that the passengers like to stand, but, and we have all the time there is, and, having shown, can get about rapidly without tiring. We left the Falcon for her new home in the harbor or up some river whenever a storm stirs up the deep.

It seems to me the ideal way of spending a summer. We go where we please, for Commander Bush, whom, for euphony's sake we have named "Commodore," generously submits the question, "Where next?" to his family and guests, and varies the route as they prefer. We have visited all the pleasure-ports of New England, have been received by several yacht clubs and saluted by hundreds of yachts, steamers and light-houses, and the Falcon has palpitated with the Jumbo tide in all parts of the convulsive bay of Fundy.

"Very well; how much does the whole racket cost?" I hear the inquisitive reader asking. Not far from $1,000 a month, I believe for everything. This sum seems large; but the reader should remember that the Falcon's saloon table is always spread with the best of the market affords, and that the crew, instead of living like crew of the ocean steamers and of a good many yachts, live as well as the guests.

This expense, of course, does not include the interest on the investment. The Falcon cost something like $35,000, I believe; but, as her hull is of iron and she receives the best of care, she is not allowed to deteriorate in value.

We have all gained in health; and why should we not, for we see few daily papers. We are beyond the infinite worriments of land and the fretting botherments of home. We have yet to see the first warm day; we talk no politics, and we have nothing to do but to fish when we are at anchor, and when flying from port to port to life off in our stateroom chairs under the broad awning and read the latest novel, or, perchance, sleep the sleep of the indolent. If we feel particularly lively we gather about the piano in the forward saloon and see what pleasure we can get out of that. If we are languid and yet ambitious, we start the big music-box in the dining-room and lounge on the sofas of embossed velvet.

The Falcon was built four years ago for President Garfield, was in part owned by him and was used by him and his friends on the Potomac; and, when we were at Bar Harbor Mr. Blaine said he once had a trip on her with Garfield, and would like to cruise around Mount Desert in her. But our desire to visit Nova Scotia would not permit us to wait for him.

Coming up the harbor of St. John, New Brunswick, at high tide in a yacht is a good deal like traversing the Norwegian maelstrom in a wherry. The Falcon trembled a good deal on her sturdy legs, and her rail, white and blue drapery fluttered with something like apprehension as the contending tides dashed around and clutched her keel and shook her from stem to stern. The harbor boiled in a thousand cauldrons and bubbled furiously and whirlled and swirled. Through all this the Falcon made her way to a spot which the captain thought was safe off King street, opposite the center of the town. Two bells were rung to back, the anchor was hoisted over the side, the word was given to the sailors to "let go," the anchor chain rattled angrily through the hawser-hole, and the boat was fast. At the same moment, Commodore Bush pulled the fuse-lanyard, and our cannon sent up a mollifying salutation to the British lion, and a song of congratulation that we had got safely into the harbor on top of a thirty-foot tide.

St. John is a very imposing town, seen from the bay, perched high upon a knob of the Laurentian granite, clean and steeply crowned. We went ashore in the gig, and four stout men at the oars could just hold their own against the furious tide, now sweeping out. The water was nearly level with the top of the wharves—within three feet. The town bears close inspection. The streets are broad and straight, and as they are bisected through granite, the job of paving is not expensive. I don't know a town of 35,000 inhabitants in the State which presents such a commercial aspect or such continuous lines of handsome stores and warehouses. The parks are not exactly festive, the finest being laid out in the old graveyard, with nothing to enliven it except the mouldering coquetry of the dead. It is a good place for tramps, but hardly up to the requirements of open-air courting. To see a rustic couple spooning there, sitting on a horizontal grave-stone and swinging their legs in rapture while the efface with their obtrusive anatomy the whole of the tender or stimulating inscription, there are few things more touching to the reflective mind.

We wandered around three or four hours, and when we got back to South Wharf there had been "a sea change." The tide that was there when we came ashore had gone to the Sandwich Islands, and was now delivering its Yankee message at Honolulu. The water had dropped twenty feet or more, and the side of the wharf was now a perpendicular pasture of sea grass and slimy dunes. The half dozen yachts that were letting down their right to the wharf of Market slip when we arrived were now holding it up to the wharf at the end of the flying boom, and the wharf at the end of the flying boom, and the wharf at the end of the flying boom.

When that night we turned in—Nepheus for "twelve bed"—the harbor was a merry Bosphorus of quarrelsome currents. For the reader will not fail to remember that we were in the very mouth of the St. John, the largest river on our coast between the St. Lawrence and the Mississippi, which is navigable for steamers for 370 miles and discharges an enormous volume of water over the twenty-foot falls, just above where we were floating. In the harbor it has erected a sort of sub-marine delta, and it has fallen into the bad habit of rushing down one channel and drenching up another in a tireless rigidity. Add to this a glutinous sea tide that runs up at the rate of a thousand miles an hour or less, and piles itself up as if aurochs to possess all the adjoining land, a crazy tide that never goes in one direction a yard at a time, but sweeps in fearful eddies up stream when it is flowing out, and down stream when it is flowing in, and across stream as if it were going up.

About midnight I was awakened by a heavy and swift foot on deck overhead. I listened and heard eager voices. Then a sailor rapped at the door of the commodore's room near by and said: "Cap'n wants to see you at once, sir!"

I rose, slipped on something, and went on deck. It was clear, and there was in the sky a fine sample of new moon.

"We're adrift, sir, and running with the rising tide," said the captain, as the owner came on deck. "She has slipped her anchor, and is rushing up under the falls, and I don't know what the mischief to do!" He did not, of course, say "mischief," for that is not a nautical word.

Instead of mischief, he appealed to the old King-see of mischief, whose name the pupil tells us we should never take in vain. And the captain didn't take it in vain. For as soon as the K. B. of M. got time to turn around and reflect, he released his clutch of the anchor-chain, and the dukes caught in the rock and held!

"She's bit," the captain said, if she holds 'till all right. If she lets go again we'll be under the Falls in ten minutes unless I can run her ashore. And there's no steam up!" She held her gun for half an hour and we turned in again, not a little anxious. The captain waited the deck all night. The next morning the Falcon crept back, and the commodore lashed her to an immense buoy—a twenty-foot cube of timbers, anchored to the bottom. All seemed sweet at least, but that night we were buffeted by that buoy, and jammed, and jammed, till some of the sleepers dreamed that the earth had collided with a comet, and some that they were going to Mount Washington, and the captain flew from the locomotive, while some of the sleepers weren't sleepers at all. It seemed as if such a one-sided boxing match must have bruised the Falcon's head, and the commodore said next morning that when he got back to New York he would have her bumps examined by a marine phreologist in the ship-yard.

A CITY OF PRETTY GIRLS.

The Way Steep Streets and Pure Air contribute to the Beauty of Quebec Women.

[N. Y. Sun.]

"There are no homely girls in Quebec," a native-born Canadian said to a visitor to the ancient citadel city of Canada. "I have been on foot at a window and watched for one in the throng passing on the sidewalk, but I have never yet seen a Quebec girl who could be described as ugly. I don't claim that they are all absolutely beautiful; but there is something in the clear, invigorating air, and perhaps in the soil and surroundings of this lofty and rocky city, that gives them sparkling eyes, brilliant complexions, and elasticity of step. Montreal is full of pretty women, but Quebec can beat her in that respect. Have you noticed how easily our Quebec girls climb the steep city streets. When they are ascending a sidewalk that slopes upward at an apparent angle of thirty degrees, they don't seem to mind it. They don't lag, they don't get out of breath, they don't stagger from one side of the sidewalk to the other. They just go up as lightly and gracefully as any lady can walk across a parlor floor. You can't do it and keep pace with them, unless you've been brought up here. They'd tire you out before you got half way from Beak-neck Steps to Dufferin Terrace. The exercise they get is partly the secret of their good looks."

"Then there's another thing that helps. They're out of doors half the time. On a pleasant evening the terrace, that broad back promenade which stretches for a quarter of a mile along the top of the precipice under the brow of Cape Diamond, is crowded with them, strolling in pairs and groups, chatting, laughing, and perhaps flirting a little. You don't mind that, do you? No. Well, look what a pleasant ground it is. You have two feet above the water of the St. Lawrence, and facing one of the very finest views in the world, as everybody admits, which extends from Point Levi down the river to Cape Tourment, and from the gorge of Montmorency far back among the Laurentian Mountains. You can't blame our Quebecers for being proud of it. And there's where the Quebec girls breathe the pure air that puts roses in their cheeks and the snap into their eyes. You see, steep streets and plenty of fresh air, and, perhaps, the subtle influence of a world-famous landscape, form the chief secret of the beauty of our girls."

FIRST WORDS.

Posterity will inherit oft times and will hold us responsible for the history of the present. That our children may respect our memories, it is fitting we honor our age by dedicating our lives to the sacred majesty of Truth. In advancing the interests of civilization we necessarily proclaim for justice and right, liberty and morality. In advancing the best interests of Hawaii nei that she may keep pace with the march of nations, the DAILY HONOLULU PRESS will endeavor to express, in an independent and logical manner, liberal views on government, society, and Hawaiian affairs generally. We shall advocate reform in politics and Government and shall always hold our columns open to the interests of public morality. As reform supposes defect we shall endeavor to point out an evil before we demand its cure and suggest a remedy. It will be our constant aim to fairly represent public opinion, and we shall always give the views of those who differ with us a full and fair statement, but shall insist upon holding their advocates responsible for all the logical conclusions of such positions, and we shall expect to be so held responsible by others. No fact will be suppressed, no argument will be avoided—let the results be what they may. Arguments on both sides of all public questions will be freely admitted into our columns. We will have nothing to do with private broils. Personalities will be excluded except in cases where the personal acts of public men or private individuals demand censure for the public good. We shall neither uphold nor condemn a Ministry in power because its members belong to this party or to that, but shall make their official actions objective. We shall, however, reserve the right to test, at any time, the fitness for office of any member or members of an existing Ministry.

Owing to the uncertainty of human affairs it would be impolitic to attempt a specific outline of policy for an independent journal. Suffice it to say that our course will be guided at all times toward the establishment and continuance of good Government, for the upbuilding of social and educational institutions, for the establishment and protection of home industries and the fostering of planters' interests, for the purification of public morals and for the general prosperity and welfare of Hawaii.

Those who follow our course, give us their support and sympathy, and aid us with pen or patronage will be able to judge if we deserve a continuance of their friendship as the details of our policy shall be developed.

The reports of the steps taken by the Government in regard to the Paia Plantation troubles have been given to the public.

It appears that out of a total of 62 persons, viz: 50 men, 7 women and 5 children, 44 have been returned to the Immigration Depot, including 36 men, 5 women and 3 children. This leaves a difference of 18 persons who are accounted for as follows: 4 men died at Paia; 1 man died in the hospital here; 7 men are now in the Honolulu hospital; 1 man, 2 women and 2 children in the hospital at Wailuku; and one man returned to Japan. At the Japanese Consulate 17 deaths have been reported, 14 adults and 3 children. Nine of these adults belonged to Paia and Hamakua plantations. We will refer to these troubles and the reports in future.

In the Marshal of the Kingdom doing his faithful duty toward the breaking up of the opium ring, is he fully sustained therein; or is there not a higher and a stronger ring hampering him?

Is there any particular reason why the Fire Department companies throw water under the doors and through the fittings of window sashes when they practice in our narrow streets.

PROSPECTUS.

Many maintain that the day of weekly-newspapers is past in Honolulu; that the people want their news and food for thought fresh with their coffee every day; and that the people are willing to pay for what they want. At the very nominal figure established as the subscription price of Honolulu Dailies, fifty cents a month, it must be borne in mind that six or seven hundred, or even a thousand subscribers is but a mere bagatelle toward the expense of conducting a newspaper. Our advertising rates are not such as would satisfy our Pacific Coast contemporaries, or in fact any but those who labor for the love of it rather than for profit. This paper will not be run for glory, but will be conducted on a sound financial basis and value received will be given to its patrons in every case. We believe that the independent elements in the community will appreciate and properly support a daily morning paper that is outspoken and independent in its utterances.

The DAILY HONOLULU PRESS will be published every morning, Sunday's excepted, for the proprietors, Messrs. L. T. Valentine and Arthur J. Monstone. Mr. Valentine will be the responsible business manager and Mr. Monstone will be the responsible editor of the paper. It will be the aim of the management to make the HONOLULU PRESS a newspaper in every sense of the word. The paper will contain twenty-eight columns including a daily average of from six to eight columns of local news, editorial matter and short pithy articles of general interest to the residents of the Hawaiian Islands. It will be made distinctively a family newspaper, and will endeavor to reach the interests of all classes of citizens without introducing the objectionable features of the newspapers of large cities.

The editorial department will be conducted in a candid, manly and impartial manner, and while political theories and public actions will be carefully probed, and, in many cases, severely criticized, the utterances of the paper will be jealously guarded and not allowed to degenerate into abuse or personal detraction. In the main, editorial articles will be short and always to the point; but in cases where the facts warrant and public opinion demands, fuller expositions of living issues will be given.

Our local department will contain everything of interest to the general readers of the islands and will include local notes from the other islands and general correspondence on local topics. This department will be made spicy and readable, and will, from time to time be interspersed with humorous local episodes. Full reports of all public events and social entertainments will be given and a just equivoque will be established among our various social elements for special news.

The shipping department will be made full and correct and special arrangements will be made for weekly corrected lists of foreign shipping. Full shipping notes of our inter-island traffic will be given, and the interests and convenience of shippers will be carefully studied and provided for.

Our advertising department will be conducted on liberal business principles in such a manner that the ends of patrons may be reached by placing their wants and desires before a majority of the reading public. Promptness and correctness in this department will be assured. Arrangements have been made with the proprietors of the Saturday Press to carry out all unexpired advertising contracts and subscriptions, which will faithfully done. Collections will be made monthly and all bills against this paper will be paid monthly upon presentation to the business manager.

In conclusion, the chief aim of the HONOLULU PRESS will be to foster and protect Hawaiian interests while special attention will be given to individual industries and plantation enterprises. We expect to merit the support of the community and respectfully ask the privilege of a fair trial.

It is an open question, whether this year's base-ball season has developed the play of the members of the various clubs. The scientific attainments in the game take high rank, and the interest-increases in a corresponding degree; but of late some disappointment has been felt at the evident lack of vigilance on the part of players, compared with their play at the opening of the season. Has familiarity bred contempt?

The impression is erroneous that the road supervisor has an interest in the carriage factories in town, or gets a royalty on every carriage spring injured by the ruts and hollows in our thoroughfares.

VOTES.

The large augmentation in the number of the volunteer forces in Honolulu, which has been lately made, would indicate an activity on the part of the present Ministry towards securing the election of dependent candidates at coming elections, which their opponents can by no means afford to ignore. That many of these proposed voters are under legal age, in fact, mere boys, is known; and it is to be hoped that every possible obstacle will be placed by the Opposition in the way of illegal voting in this respect. With the universally acknowledged and growing weakness of the present Administration, and the prevalent desire of electors to see things put upon a better footing both financially and otherwise, there is no reason why hopes should not be entertained by the Independent Party as well of carrying this district as others, if the preliminary campaigning for that purpose be wisely planned and energetically carried out. This we have reason to believe will be the case. Perhaps the Independents could not conscientiously resort to the trick of meeting their opponents with their own weapons; but even the Administration is fully aware that they will have to meet at the polls an array of opponents that have neither diminished in power or number since the last elections. The time has come when the effects of bad Legislation and executive extravagance are being felt by all classes of voters, and something more substantial than the windy promises of a faithless Administration are needed to soothe the prevalent spirit of discontent. Hard times are upon us, that are felt by the laboring man as well as the merchant and planter. The cause is not inscrutable to the ordinary voter, and the only way offering for relief, is through action at the polls.

POSTPRANDIAL.

I met, a few days ago, a gentleman who had just returned from the Sandwich Islands. He was a full-fledged American—a strong believer in republican institutions—and the occasion of his visit was the first time he had ever spent in the presence of royalty. Never having the opportunity of visiting that little kingdom, I was quite interested in listening to my friend's description of the South Sea Paradise.

"I noticed," he said, "a curious antagonism between the American and English residents. While both are what you may call loyal to the reigning powers, the Americans believe that the country would do much better as a republic, while the English consider that its prospects would improve under the protection of the British flag. There are, therefore, two parties outside the regularly organized government—and opposition sections—one for republicanism and one for annexation to Great Britain. Besides, there are the natives, who are devotedly attached to the King, and who are as yet in the conviction that Hawaii is the grandest country on the Almighty's footstool."

"Tell me about the court," I asked, "and how you felt in the presence of majesty."

"Well, you know my visit to the islands was one of business, and it was necessary to make a direct appeal to the King. I obtained a card from the Chamberlain, Colonel Judd, who, by the way, came up with me on the last steamer, and presented myself at the palace gates. A dusky sentry conducted me to the King, who was engaged in writing the lives of the Kamehamehas in his library. I found a pleasant, intelligent and affable gentleman, who listened attentively to my story and appeared to thoroughly understand the objects of my visit. I gave the sentry a dollar, and I noticed that at my exit there were four soldiers in line, all of whom presented arms in the most respectful manner. I was not vain enough to attribute this courtesy to the dignity of my personal appearance, but concluded the dollar was the key to this military honor. The next morning I received an invitation to a court ball, and there I saw royalty and its belongings in gala attire."

"That old time American subject and San Franciscan, Mr. Paul Neumann, now Attorney General of the kingdom, was one of the most conspicuous figures in the long ballroom of the palace where the reception was held. Paul was literally covered with gold lace, from the crown of his curly head to his foot. He held a cocked hat under his arm, wore a court sword, and looked so awfully imposing that I hesitated about addressing him by his Christian name. And when I saw him sail across the room with a Princess on one arm and a lady of the royal household on another, I shrank into a corner and said to myself, 'Can that be the Paul Neumann whom I have heard soliciting the suffrages of the Tenth ward in a plain, commonplace San Francisco hall? Is this brilliant butterfly the gay fellow whom I have glimpsed through the saloons of Kearny street? Can this haughty apparition in gold lace, wearing an order about his neck and a sword by his side, whom I have heard address the presiding officer of a justices' court as 'your honor,' and in an eloquent argument allege that his client never owed the $99.75 to the tailor, but that there was a mistake somewhere, and he was sure that it was upon the tailor's side."

"But it was Paul, nevertheless, though not the Paul of my California associations. This was the Neumann of the Court, and, as I saw him make a low obeisance to His Majesty, and whisper some diplomatic communication, I suppose, into the ear of the British Minister, an old gentleman with an extraordinarily developed nose, I could imagine myself in an orchestra seat of the California Theatre, witnessing a representation of 'The Grand Duchess.'"

"When the brilliant courtier condescended to notice me he was most profuse in his introductions. I tell you, for a plain American citizen like myself, it was most embarrassing to be presented now to Her Royal Highness, the princess of So-and-So, and then to His Excellency, the Honorable Jones, Ambassador Extraordinary and Envoy Plenipotentiary to the Court of His Serene Majesty, King Kalakaua. I seemed to be the only man in the room who had not a handle to his name, or a gold stripe along his trousers' leg. I tried to remind Paul of some of our old times, but I could no more move him a peg from the dignity of the Attorney General in full uniform at a court ball than I could announce myself as the Duke of Alviso."

"Presently a tall, slim, military looking person entered, made a low bow to the King, and craved the royal ear for a few minutes."

"Who is that?" I asked a little fellow near me, who, like myself, was attired in the plain black garments of the unaristocratic American."

"That, sir," said he, pompously, "is Brigadier General Hayley, the Commander-in-Chief of the Hawaiian forces; and I have no doubt that he has matter of grave importance to the welfare of the kingdom else he would not importune His Majesty to listen to him on this, a state occasion."

"I was crushed. I saw at once that this fellow had no sympathy with me, and I longed more than ever for a gold stripe down my trousers' leg."

"It seems to me," I remarked, "that you did not approach the throne in the proper sentiment. By your manner of relating your experiences I should conclude that you were on the outlook for something to laugh at."

"Well, I was not," said my Hawaiian traveler. "I'll be hanged if I didn't feel as serious as if I were in the presence of the Emperor of Germany, or Queen Victoria, or some of the other great ones of the earth. Now, understand me, that there was no bumblebee about the King. Dusky as he is, begad, he looked every inch a King; but it was the gold-laced American that got away with me. I saw a thin little chap come in, with his hair banged away down his forehead, who nearly touched the floor as he bowed before the dais on which the King and Queen were seated. 'That,' said my little cicero, is the Honorable Joseph H. Strong, painter to His Majesty; and who is now engaged on a great work representing the 'Conquest of the Island of Oahu by Kamehameha, the Conqueror.'"

"Why, I know him," says I; "that's Joe Strong, one of the San Francisco boys."

"My friend looked at me with a displeased expression. 'I told you, sir,' he said, 'that the gentleman was the Honorable Joseph H. Strong, historical painter to the Royal Family of Hawaii.' 'This squelched me, of course, and I had nothing more to say. By and by supper was announced, and it was really a first class meal. I remarked that all the honorables, painters, soldiers, Ministers, Ambassadors, etc., went at the grub in good, common fashion, and made the gin bottles—for gin is the national drink—hum around that table. My friend Paul made a speech, and told some of those venerable jokes which were current in San Francisco ten years ago. But they hit the Hawaiians in the right place, for they laughed as heartily as if the mold of a weary decade had not rested on these antique chests; and I heard one gold-laced neighbor of mine whisper to another that the Attorney General was in great vein to-night, and that the last thing he got off was about the best he ever heard in his life."

"All this time, you must remember, the thermometer stood at about 100, and though I, in my light black suit, suffered considerably, it was an icicle by comparison with the fellows in the gold-laced casings. It was a sight to watch their collars melt. The wax in the historical painter's bangs ran down his cheeks in funny-looking blotches, and the steam rising from the mass of sweating humanity was like one of our summer afternoon fogs. As for the ladies—well, they wore dresses of light material, but they were so saturated that they clung to their shoulders like bathing suits. My last impression of my only experience of royalty was the vision of the Attorney General in the mist clinging to the neck of the historical painter, and reproaching him in indignant terms for not putting enough lime juice in the last round of gin punch."—San Francisco Post.

Arrangements will be made during the week to have full Police Court reports and other interesting local matter, including a brief of the higher court proceedings, and the latest fashion notes.

A few minutes before 10 o'clock last night an alarm of fire was struck. It appears that shortly after the circus was out the center of the canvas roof caught fire from the center pole lamps. The fire was extinguished without the aid of the Fire Department, which however was promptly on hand.

THE FABLE OF POCHUNK.

A Land of Peace and Plenty, Where the Crows are Full of Wisdom, And Know Enough to Provide for Themselves Upon all Occasions.

In the region, where the Pochunk Creek gropes its slothful way along the western edge of Sussex county, to eventually become an integral part of the great Drowned Lands of New Jersey and New York, good farming land is plenty, and the follower of the plow grows fat and rich.

Nowhere, perhaps, in all the land of Jersey does the industrious and mellifluous crow abound and appear more thrifty than in Pochunk's garden spot. Yet, prevalent and obtrusive as the crow is in that section, none of those fearfully and wonderfully made enigmas which the old-time farmer fondly believed carried terror to the soul of the marauding crow is to be seen guarding the cornfield. The Pochunk farmer does not dangle carcasses of dead crows from networks of twine to convey to the minds of live ones the alarming impression that the dead birds were caught and hanged while visiting the field to undo the planter's work; nor does he hang gyrating fragments of dazling tin from lofty poles to awaken suspicion in the prowling deviator of the cornfield. I suggested to a representative Pochunk tiller of the soil that these facts were odd.

"Y-a-s-s," said he, "it does look so. But we used to set up the scarecrows o' all scarecrows, an' run miles an' miles o' cord 'round the fields an' use ourselves up tryin' to think o' ways to ketch a crow or two to hang on the strings; an' the hunks o' tin we used to tie to poles 'd shingle all the roofs in the county. But when we took to seein' the crows, years an' years ago, lightin' on the scarecrows an' tearin their clothes off, an' then takin' the pieces o' rag an' foldin' 'em up inter little bags, which they carried with 'em over the field an' filled with the corn they flug up an' flew away with, pecks an' pecks that they couldn't a-got no other way, we jist met an' past a resolutions to let the scarecrows go an' we did. Then the crows got to doin' all sorts o' circusin' on the twine we stretched, an' 'd cut the dead crows from the strings an' jist take their carcasses straight inter the cornfields, dig graves fur 'em in the hills o' corn an' plant 'em with reglar funerals ceremonies. When we see that, we met an' passed another resolution to use the string for set lines for eels, an' the string had to go. We stuck to the swingin' an' clatterin' an' dazlin' tin, but I'm blamed if the crows didn't take to settlin' on them poles an' amusin' themselves by turnin' them bright pieces o' tin so they'd throw the reflection o' the sun inter our eyes so darn sharp that there wa'n't a man ex could see to work in the fields. So we had to either give up corn-plantin' or sell the tin, fur old iron, and we did. Then we tried the soakin' o' the seed corn in pizen. That knocked a lot o' the crows, an' we found a good many o' 'em dead around the deestrie. We met an' howled fur 'y, an' passed a resolution that we had 'em now. But we didn't know the capacity o' Pochunk crows. One day we discovered the crows a-workin' as lively as ever on the pizen corn, an' noticed that every one o' 'em, after he'd dug up an' golliped a few hills, 'd stick his head under his right wing an' peck away at sumpin' there, an' then perched with the feast. We didn't find no more dead crows, an' we passed a resolution that sumpin' was up. One night I went out an' dug a hole in one corner o' my cornfield, deep enough to bury myself in, an' I buried myself in it all but my eyes an' nose and the tip end o' my shotgun. An' there I staid, hold up like a ground-hog till day-light. Bright an' 'arly down come a lot o' crows to make their breakfast on the pizen corn. One o' the black fellows got nigh enough to me, an' I loaded him up with shot, and he stayed right in his tracks. The rest o' the crows, o' course, was a mile away in less'n no time. I dug myself out and picked up the dead crow. I looked under his right wing an' what do ye s'pose I found? A bunch o' wild mustard. Wild mustard was a sure antidote to the pizen we had in that seed corn, and them crows had jist gathered some of it every time they made a raid on the corn, an' had topped off ev'ry two or three gollups o' corn with a chaw o' mustard, knowin' that 'd knock spots out o' the pizen. Then we did meet. An' we passed a resolution that it wa'n't no use. All but o' Squire Spooner. He said he couldn't fetch himself to believe in the doctum o' total depravity, even in crows. He said he believe that they could read, an' that if they see that we was willin' to do the right thing by 'em they'd do the right thing by us.

"I'm ginter try a speriment," said the Squire. "I'm ginter try a speriment," said he, an' I believe it'll work. Wait an' see," said he.

"So we passed a resolution that we'd wait. What d'ye think the Squire done? He drew a row o' stakes around a quarter of an acre o' one o' the best fields of corn he had planted, an' th' wa'n't a pizen hill in the lot. Then he had a sign painted. It read like this:

CROWS, ATTENTION!

ALL THE CORN INSIDE OF THESE

STAKES IS YOUR'N.

HELP YERSELVES!

"There," said the Squire. "Them crows is able to cipher that out, an' ye needn't tell me," said he, "that any livin' critter is mean enough to steal when they kin gether in their own."

"We waited to see how the speriment d' come out. The crows settled all around that sign, an' looked it over, an' had the darndest cawin' 'tug over it y'er ever heard. By an' they dropped inter their quarter acre an' went to diggin' up their own corn. Th' wa'n't a crow anywhere else in the lot. We met and passed a resolution that we'd be blamed if we ever see or hear tell o' the like, an' that we'd all set off a cornfield for crows. An' we'd a done it, too, if it hadn't a-ben for one thing. When the Squire went out next mornin' to see how his crows was gettin' 'long, ye kin thrash me with a rawhide an' I'll holler if them crows hadn't moved them stakes back in the lot mo'n 200 feet—New York News.
