IMITATION GEMS AND THEIR WEARERS.

An Interview With an Expert.

"Yes," said the proprietor of a well-known "imitation gem"
shop, not far from Regent Circus,
"imitation stones are much more worn than formerly. And why not? They are as pretty; indeed, it is only experts who can detect them nowadays, so well are the real gems imitated. And, then, they are so much cheaper.

"Do I mean to say that detection is impossible?" he continued, repeating my question. "Well,
I don't go so far as that, but very nearly."

A little tray was pushed across the glass case towards me. It was nearly full of stones: opals,
diamonds, sapphires, rubies,
turquoises, emeralds, and pearls,
the latter both white and black.

"Those are mixed gems; some are real and some we manufacture in our factory near Paris.
See if you can pick out which are real stones. Take them to the light," said the man, "if you like to, sir."

I stepped to the door into the light, which was unusually strong even for a July day in London, and attempted to "spot" the genuine stones. I felt all the while that I was going wrong with the pearls, diamonds, emeralds, and turquoises, the rubies
and sapphires seeming to me,
after a close scrutiny, comparatively easy of detection. Whilst I held the little tray, with its sparkling, scintillating contents in my hand—which, if all the stones had been real and of high grade, would have represented a small fortune—I must confess to at first feeling much as I should had I been asked to guess which thimble the pea was under.

After about ten minutes, however, I had made a selection, and we both returned to the counter.
The gems I had chosen as real were spread out on a shallow tray lined with white velvet, and, fixing a lens into his eye, the jeweller proceeded to examine my selection. I had picked out twenty-six stones of various kinds as real. Seventeen were imitation.
My greatest failure was with the diamonds, pearls, and turquoises, which would, I think, have deceived almost anybody, so true in colour, lustre, and general appearance were they. My greatest success was with rubies and sapphires. Even to my comparatively inexperienced eyes, imitations of the former seemed "murky" in colour, and of the latter wanting in the peculiar
"fire" which fine stones have.

"You have done remarkably well," said he when he had finished showing me my mistakes; "far better, indeed, than nine out of ten amateurs—I suppose you are an amateur?" he observed—"would have done."

"You would be surprised to know how many of the best people wear imitation stones. I could tell you some names that

PROGRESS.

The Life of the Land is Established in Righteousness.

HONOLULU, OCT. 17, 1893.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

The Star has several times encouraged the establishment of small farms in Hawaii, and advocated the partition of the large lands now belonging to the Crown and to the Government into homesteads. Theoretically, the Star is undoubtedly right, but practically we believe it to be way off the mark. The comparisons which it draws between France, England and America on one side, and Hawaii on the other cannot bear criticism. Hawaii is not adapted for the small farmer, simply because there is no market for any products, except sugar which it is an impossibility to raise profitably on a small scale. In Illinois and other states where the small farmer thrives and flourishes, there is a ready market for the products which he can raise, and which he does not use for home consumption. The means of transportation are very facile. The grain which he raises, the butter which he produces, the few heads of cattle or the pigs and poultry which he desires to sell, can be transported by rail to the great manufacturing cities with their numerous inhabitants and easily disposed of. Should the joined numbers of small farmers produce more than can be consumed by the inhabitants of the local markets, the products will be carried as easily to more distant markets in adjoining states or if it should be necessary exported from the country to foreign markets.

Not so in Hawaii! What would the Star propose a small farmer to do with a piece of land he it ever so fertile, say on the Island of Hawaii? What products would he be supposed to raise? Where would he have a chance to sell it? And last but not least, how should the white farmer be able to compete with his Chinese colleague? In the district of Makawao in Kula on Maui is the only place where we have noticed small farms thriving and sometimes succeeding. There may be other places on other Islands but Kula is a good example of what can be done. There are men who rent lands from the Crown or Government or even own them in fee, but they are not exactly "small" farms but of a considerable acreage. The farmer will have, say from fifty to two, or three hundred head of cattle running partly on his own lands, and partly (for a consideration) over the lands of his neighbors. He will select some of the cattle for carting purposes, and make a nice income by carting wood to the adjoining plantation, or freight, or whatever use he can find for his team. Some of his cattle, he will use for milking purposes, and he will make butter which can either be sold in the vicinity or shipped weekly to Honolulu.

Part of his land he will plant with corn for which there always is a demand, and part he will plant with Irish potatoes for which he finds a ready market in Honolulu. The neighboring butcher will yearly buy whatever beef-cattle he can afford to sell, and the turkeys and pigs which are there in abundance are always in demand. His living expenses are small, because he can raise everything necessary for home-consumption and his household necessities. Isn't this a beautiful picture of the small farm? Does it not look more tempting than the picture of coffee plantations and Guava jellies which heretofore have been unrolled before the public by the Star editor and other homesteads promoters? And yet, who ever succeeded of the foreigners who have tried it, except perhaps a few Chinamen and one or two Portuguese? The picture of these farms as drawn by us is not exaggerated the least, and to the superficial mind it must be a perfect paradise. But the secret is that, it takes capital to start the business, and the man with capital as a rule doesn't propose to get up in the mountains and haul wood, or dig potatoes, or milk the cows and make the butter, and as the result of his combined capital and labor have just a bare living, and none of the comforts of civilization. By capital we do not mean a few hundred dollars, but rather a few thousand, and doesn't the Star think that a man with that amount would prefer to live among congenial surroundings cultivating oranges and other fruits in California within a few days journey from San Francisco than lock himself and family up in Kula, District of Makawao, Maui?

The Star editor may suggest that if a number of such farms was started a prosperous colony would be founded, and the "congenial" surroundings would no longer be missing. Yes, but if a number of such farms on a similar scale were opened up the local markets would be overstocked and the farmer would soon have to undertake the unprofitable task of eating his own potatoes. This country can never become a manufacturing country nor can we ever hope to successfully export products which can be raised tenfold cheaper and equally good in California, the only outlet for our products that we have. As it is now, the market for butter is overstocked, and the price is so low that it has ceased to be a paying industry. And the same would soon be the case with all other products which can be raised and give returns within a reasonable time.

And if a man without capital should attempt the experiment of becoming a "small farmer" (there are enough examples of them here) it is a question of a very short time when his neighbor the millionaire-planter—with his t-a certain minute open check-book—will gobble up everything to be found on the farm, and change the brand on the bullocks, and cows, and pigs, and turkeys, and cats, to that used by the large flocks on his own broad lands. The experiment has been tried often enough, but by all means, let us try it again. Only if any man is to be induced to come here and become a "small farmer" let him to do so, not under false pretenses, but with his eyes fully open. The Star has got the theory—we have got the practice.

In the present Government are a number of men who have been ardent, yes, intolerant defenders, and advocates of the temperance cause, who have fought and agitated for total prohibition or for measures, which virtually amount to the same thing, who have appeared on the rostrum in the Churches and in the Y. M. C. A., and exhorted, and preached and finally lifted their voices in chorus with the old ladies, who trade in this kind of business. What must be the surprise then to the country to see these men who stamped Marsden's light wine and beer bill, as an infamous measure, and who talked to the reverend J. L. Stevens, with indignation about the liquor-ring leave alone the drunken orgies of the monarchy, quietly furnishing the soldiers of their government with intoxicating drinks and allowing them to swill fifteen barrels of beer at the taxpayers expense. Where is Sereno E. Bishop? Where is the W. C. T. U.? Why don't we hear about petitions and protests from these two Christian bodies against a repetition of the outrage committed by the men sporting the blue ribbon against the principle of which that ribbon is a symbol? For shame! Have politics also entered the righteous souls of the temperance advocates in this town so in their eyes intoxicating liquor is allright when used by the Provisional Government and all wrong when used by the opposition? Is that the firmness and devotion to principle of these ladies (male and female)? Where are the Waterhouses? Where is W. W. Hall? Alas! the later who wore the blue ribbon with such a pride (while shipping alcohol to the whalers) is the Quartermaster General of the fifteen-barrel-of-beer-drinking-soldiers and will foot the bill for the stuff. Send next Sunday all the seven companies to church and let them be exhorted, and let all the old ladies expound on the virtues of weak coffee, and the unspeakable evils of beer. Inconsistency your name is Waterhouse, and Hall—Alco, Hall & Son.

AN ABRUPT TRANSITION.

This could of Course never have Happened in Honolulu.

At a dainty little supper
With a jaunty little miss
A naughty little husband
Was pleading for a kiss.
His life was in its winter,
His heart, he said, was cold;
He vowed that it would warm it
If her he might unfold.
"Oh, thaw the ice, my darling,"
He pleaded, "with your breath!"
His wife sprang out before them
And then he prayed for death.
"I am sorry you're so chilly"
(The tones he never forgot),
And instantly she made it Uncomfortably hot.

MITTENS WILLET.

Who is the young Hawaiian "journalist" who now uses a handkerchief with the Stars and Stripes, and has abandoned the Hawaiian flag badge? And echo answers, Who?

A True Philadelphia Story.

The wicked men who steal have penetrated even into the sacred precincts of the office of the superintendent of police.

Until yesterday a pretty little blue enameled sign, the lettering on which was in spotless white, ornamented the top of Clerk Roop's desk, which stands in the ante-room to the office of Superintendent Linden. It read:

WE NEVER SLEEP.

Somebody stole this sign.

Now there is trouble around headquarters, and the atmosphere has assumed the melancholic hue of the background of the departed motto. When "Billy" Foster, the messenger, arrived yesterday morning, and discovered that the "terrorizer," as the inoffensive little strip of tin was called, had been embezzled, he went out and in an agony of grief had all his hair cut off. Roop followed suit, and Charley Henry would have likewise, but—

Captain Miller refuses to state what steps had been taken to apprehend the culprit. It is known, however, that the loss of the sign was a severe shock. People would come into the office and, while waiting for an audience would read the solemn comic papers provided for such emergencies. Presently they would lift their eyes and see the sign. The gloom would have their faces and knowing grins would linger instead.

Another sign has been ordered, which will read:

WE HARDLY EVER SLEEP.

The detectives are being closely guarded. (Philadelphia Times)

THE OCEANIC.

As we go to press, the Steamer Oceanic is off Diamond Head. She will probably not leave before tomorrow morning. Among the passengers who will leave by her, is Mr. Gillig and party who go to Japan, China and India.

LOCAL NEWS.

Where is that surplus?

Band Concert at the Hotel.

Band Concert at Thomas Square.

The Naval Court is sitting again to-day.

An unruly heifer took charge of a wharf yesterday.

This country's debt was increased last week, $12,246 more.

The Advertiser man should be the last person to accuse anyone of lying.

The W. C. T. U. will hold a meeting this afternoon. Look out for that beer, ladies!

The uniforms were much more admired than the men who "sport" them last Saturday.

Some of the "brave" got full after last Saturday's show. It was alright, they belong to the P. G's.

The Star is mad, because its reporter could not "burn" in and get a free feed yesterday afternoon.

For Molokai, per schr Mokoli, Oct. 16—Rev H H Parker, Jack Lucas, Wm Mutch, Mrs J Auld, Dr M Goto.

During the last three months ending October 4th, the debt of this country was increased by $118,449.

The P. G. Band gives one of its regular moonlight concerts at Thomas Square this evening. A "full house" cannot be assured.

The "force" of last Saturday afternoon has not intimidated the loyalists at all. That is evidently all the show was given for "to try to intimidate." No use.

The judicial sale of the Wai-kapu Sugar Co's stock belonging to G. W. Macfarlane, has been postponed till December the 20th, by an order of Court.

The Hawaiian National Band gives another of its delightful musicales at the Hawaiian Hotel this evening. We bespeak another immense gathering of music loving people.

Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson is still confined to his bed, although feeling somewhat better. The famous author will leave for his Island home on Samoa on the Mariposa due here Oct. the 26th.

The Liliuokalani Educational Society gave a luau yesterday afternoon. The occasion being the eighteenth birthday anniversary of the Princess Kaiulani. A few invited guests were present. The luau was not given by the Queen as twice asserted by the "Tiser."

An Emendation.
Sawyer.—The proof of the pudding is in the eating.
De Speg.—No, it isn't. It is in the digesting.—Puck

OFFICE: Thomas' Block, King Street,
Honolulu, H. I.

would astonish you, but of course I mustn't. I could mention at least twenty titled ladies, whose family jewels are of world-wide reputation, who have 'dummy' sets, either manufactured by us or some similar firm, for general use, the family gems and heirlooms being reserved for wear upon State occasions. You would be surprised to know how many ladies habitually keep their real sets locked up in the 'safe deposits' of London.

"You see this," he continued, taking a magnificent diamond and turquoise necklet from a drawer. "We have just got this over from Paris—made as a facsimile of a family jewel—for the Countess W——." Giving a key to an assistant, he said: "Get me Lady W——'s necklet out of the safe."

In a few minutes the assistant returned, and I had in my right hand a necklet valued at £7,000, and in my left one which had cost scarcely a hundredth part as much. And yet had I changed hands I scarcely think one person in twenty would have known that I had done so.

"Who are our principal customers, sir? Well, almost every class. From the servant girl whose wages are five shillings a week, and who likes to do the swell on Sundays with a bracelet or ring, which if real would be worth £30 or £40; to the Princess who, in fear of losing her jewels, has, as I have told you, a duplicate set of imitations.

"I could tell you a good many queer stories. As you perhaps know, actresses are rather fond of having their jewels stolen. Well, some years ago an actress had her jewels stolen. She was greatly commiserated with upon her heavy loss; and a certain nobleman who was paying her attention replaced some of the stolen gems. The jewellery she had, had stolen we made. The real gems never existed! Another time a well-known 'Society' leader had her jewels stolen. Again the 'burgled' articles were 'our make.' The real ones were in a solicitor's safe, not many miles from Chancery Lane.

"The 'Johnnies' and young club men are good customers of ours. They like to make second-rate burlesque 'stars' handsome presents, and even if their idols find out that the stones are not genuine, they don't like to say anything because of the 'chaff' they would have to put up with from their fellow artistes sometimes, when a young fellow is very particular, the principal or chief stone is real, and the remaining ones sham. Only the other day a young lady brought in a pendant, which had been purchased here, and asked us if the centre stone was real. She didn't suspect the others, though all of them were of Parisian make. Of course, we satisfied her upon the genuineness of the sapphire. She never asked about the others, and we didn't enlighten her.

"Mind giving the information, sir—why should I? We don't profess to deal in anything except shams. A bad trade, isn't it? And such stones as we can truthfully say are 'our own manufacture.' Formerly there was a great objection to the wearing of imitation gems and jewellery. Nowadays the practice of doing so is increasing by leaps and bounds."—Til-Bits.
