TOPSY-TURVY.

Customs and habits differ in different countries. What in one country is the object of contempt, in another is held in admiration. Every country has something peculiar to its people and climate. Thus in Fiji the natives have a liking for a kind of beef that is never found on civilised tables, the Samoans seem to possess a propensity for old pants, and in Hawaii nei we have quite a catalogue of little eccentricities which mark us as a peculiar

We can show all creation an example in the facility and rapidity with which we jump from the gutter to greatness. To-day a common costermonger, to-morrow in the councilchamber. From the saloon bar to the charmed circle of favorites near the throne, is but a step. Fraud, felony, and fealty to practices which less liberal nations visit with incarceration and disfranchisement, instead of being obstacles to advancement, are pass-ports to promotion. Let the dignified, respectable, narrow-souled people of America and Europe, who pride themselves upon being gentlemen and men of honor, and despise meanness and chicanery, come this way, and we will show them how we turn things topsyturvy. Honor to the dogs! Sense and decency be thingumbobbed!

We have a right to our own tastes and to our own ways. Quiet, unobtrusive, respectable people are not to our taste, because their ways are too slow for our ways. The back of the hall or outside of the door is their proper place, and that is where they will have to stay. Our style is bluster, noise, a flash carriage and a fast horse, volumes of empty talk, without sense or reason, and expensive living, the higher above income the better. These are the prime ingredients of our aristocracy.

We meet a man in a seedy raiment and a most inexcusable hat. We pass him by. He is not the man one likes to recognise. That man actually pays his debts, and the fellow doesn't owe a cent. He has a wife and family, for whom he provides bread in a most mean and plentiful manner. He has never been through the Court, nor in jail. Besides, his dress is careless and worn, and he has the impudence to say without any feeling of shame that, as long as his family are sufficiently attired, he refers the question of a new coat to a committee of his butcher, baker, and grocer. Such a man is not suited to Hawaiian tastes, and though highly intelligent and the embodiment of a gentleman, we nod and pass on.

We next meet a man in a chimneytop hat. We grin, and bow, and scrape like a belligerent bull, and greet him affectionately, with all sorts of congratulations about everything. By the gloss of his clothes we know that he belongs to the aristocracy, and by the magnitude of his gold chain we infer that he has got the better of his creditors. The overpowering brilliance of his boots indicates that he walks in fashionable circles. We all respect him, sir, because he is a man of principle, and his principle is to be insolent to his supposed inferiors and obsequious to his superiors. He is one of our society people. He has the freedom of the Palace, and is always on hand at balls. By his adroitness he has managed to "outrun the constable," and there is no public honor we refuse to him, so long as he continues a martyr to his

It should be distinctly understood by visitors to our shores and people of short residence in the country, that we do not feel ourselves bound to or by the conventionalities of other countries. We consider ourselves at liberty to follow the bent of our own inclination. And why should we not?

It is true, we have made a feeble attempt to copy from some of the antiquated monarchies of Europe in the matter of orders and decorations; but we have left them far behind in the number and variety of our goldwashed jewelry. Then, we have greatly improved on the method and objects of bestowal. They make their rather plain looking pieces of brumagem difficult to get, and have a ridiculous habit of bestowing them upon select persons, as acknowledgments of long or distinguished service. They are behind the times. We are a progressive people, particularly in the matter of handling the public revenue, and are masters of that invention for getting to the devil, known as "putting a beggar on horseback," and have entirely reversed the old European order of things. We make our state jewelry as cheap as possible. We are particularly careful not to bestow it upon old and faithful servants of the realm. But every bummer that turns up from the Coast with a mouth full of natural gas and a head that sounds like an empty beer barrel, we make a Knight of the Order of Death'shead and Cross-bones, and decorate

At home, among our own people, to play "kiss me darling" on a cracked guitar, to climb a post with an electric wire, to catch a pig by the tail, to rake up from the sand the jaw bone of a jackass, to bet 6 to 4 on a horse race, and a variety of other noble deeds of a similar high order, are all sure forerunners of the distinguished honor of knighthood. And as our people are extremely expert in these various lines of skilled performances, the decorations are more in number than the hairs on a bald head. A grand ball, when the knights and the mornings gather from the taro patches, and the back slums, and the alley-ways, and the wharves, and the hovels, is the time and occasion to see the glitter and the grandeur. Solomon in all his glory was not half so mage nificent, nor half so great a muff.

with the Star of Oceanica or the Moon of Samoa.

After all, we may not have got so far ahead of the world as we imagine, and it is barely possible that we may be a lot of fools, only we are not of that opinion, at least those in the circle are not. Perhaps the sedate people on the outside, harbor a dim suspicion that it may be so.

HILO NOTES.

Thunder and lightning, freshets in the streams, and earthquakes seem to indicate unusual disturbances in the interior of the island. As usual on such occasions a new lava flow is reported. Some fellow will tell the truth about that volcano one of these days; and then the story of the bad boy and the wolf will be enacted in a revised form right in our midst.

THE LAHAINA SMALL-POX CASE.

LAHAINA, April 28, 1887. HIS EXCELLENCY W. M. GIBSON, President Board of Health.

SIR : - I have the honor to submit to Your Excellency the following report concerning the case of smallpox among the Japanese at Lahaina and the quarantine imposed on account of the same.

On my arrival here on the morning of the 12th inst. Dr. Kuehn and myself visited the patient at the pest-house. I found him thickly covered with an eruption; there were also several sores on his legs in this hard, bitter school of disappointment and failure, that Dante was being prepared for his great Great or a Little God?" In the evening

THE Royal Hawaiian Agricultural and loins, the latter most likely syphilis. On examining the cruption I found it to be of two distinct kinds, a large majority of it being superficial. On opening the same I found they contained a watery fluid, decidedly not small-pox. There were about fifty other pustules, half of which seemed to have been forced towards maturity, most likely by the use of caustic, which from experience I know to be a Japanese mode of treatment in small-pox cases. The other half were well developed pustules, having a deep base under the skin, and containing a thick pus entirely different to those first mentioned. The patient's mouth gave additional proof of the nature of the disease. On the skin between the pustules I noticed one or two marks which suggested the idea of previous small-pox. As Mr. Suja, the interpreter, and the Japanese doctor were present, I asked the patient if he had had small-pox before. He stated that he had it when young. In spite of the above information could come to no other conclusion than that it was a case of small-pox of mild form, and after watching the case for a day or two I was satisfied that the doctors had decided aright. Two or three days after my arrival the eruption first mentioned commenced to dry up and disappear, and by the 18th inst., was entirely gone, leaving the smallpox pustules well defined and progressing in the ordinary manner.

Dr. Kuehn and myself made a thorough inspection of the Japanese in quarantine yesterday, and with the aid of an interpreter obtained the following facts regarding their protection from small-pox by previous small-pox or vaccination. Out of 55 Japanese living in the house in quarantine 42 had small-pox before. About half of this number show strong marks of the disease, one-fourth show slight marks, and we have taken the word of the remaining fourth that they had it, although it has left no marks. Eleven of the Japanese who have not had small-pox show good marks of having been successfully vaccinated in Japan, and two only of them show neither small-pox nor vaccination marks. From careful inquiries I find that the patient was taken with the fever April 1st, the eruption broke out on the 4th, and the man was removed to the pest-house on the morning of the 8th. The house was thoroughly fumigated and disinfected, and with the 54 Japanese was placed under strict quarantine. There was also a quarantine placed on the town by order of Dr. Kuehn, but this was afterwards raised by orders from other quarters. Upon my arrival here, after having seen the patient, I decided to re-quarantine the town, also Olowalu, and as there are no signs of any more cases, I have raised the quarantine this morning. I have had the Japanese quarters again disinfected, and the quarters of other laborers have been cleaned and disinfected by W. Y. Horner at my request, and every precaution taken to put the place in as good sanitary condition as possible. Since the quarantine was imposed, 229 persons have been vaccinated.

I am, sir, your obedient servant, C. B. REYNOLDS, Agent Board of Health.

MRS. WILLIAMS ON DANTE.

A very appreciative audience of cultivated people gathered last night in Mrs. Dickson's hospitable home to hear Mrs. Williams's lecture on Dante. The subject was one calculated to enlist the rare powers of analysis and subtle sense of keen discrimination which this gifted lecturer possesses in such eminent degree. Mrs. Williams divided Dante's history into three periods, viz.: his youth, and young man-hood "which was not unlike that of other Florentine youth of the better class, a youth which took part in the street brawls, convivialities, and the excesses of the hot-headed young Florentines, and which early had its baptism of fire as a soldier on the field of Campaldino." It was during this period of his life that his being was engrossed in the all-absorbing love for Beatrice-"a love not for the woman of flesh and blood, but for Dante's lofty ideal of womanhood, which to his imagination Beatrice personified. His love was not of that ordinary type that overcomes the impossible in its headlong desire for possession, but was content to worship at a distance, as a devotee at the shrine of divinity." This love became his ambition, and his aim in life was to be worthy of it. Beatrice's early death seems the blighting, of all ambition, and the end of life for Dante, but it was the beginning of the second period of his life, in which those great powers heretofore have been devoted to love and his absorbing passion for the ideal womanhood, now is transferred to the service of his loved Florence. Dante's ambition now finds a new field in polities. Success and official preferment speedily crowns his efforts; but the short-lived success ends in exile, and in Florence decreeing that he who loved her so passionately and who had served her sodevotedly should be burned at the stake if he ever should be found in her streets again. For the second time Dante's absorbing ambition failed. The third period of Dante's life was his nineteen years of exile. It was in success. During all his life, prethird periods of it, Dante's ruling motive was, to serve his fellow men. Though while yet a young man he had won fame and applause as "the grand poet." this did not satisfy his great sout. He did not wish to please merely: he was not desirous of being served; but he must serve. Hence his turning away from fame in politics. And when that door was closed, and he was forced to exile to again take up his pen, instead of writing in Latin as was then the only proper thing for a great author, he wrote in the bastard Italian of his time, that the common people might have access to the productss of his genius .-

Once more bitter disappointment comes in this third period, the period of exile, poverty, and undeserved opprobium. His absorbing friendship for Can Grande Della Sala, prince of Verona, perishes when success transforms that great warrior into a self.seeking tyrant, no longer worthy of that friendship. Mrs. Williams's incidental analyses of Dante's great works, the Vita Nuova and the Divina Commedia were discriminating and excellent. The portrayal of Dante's character was, in the main, exact, and the great Florentine seemed under the masterly hand of the gifted lecturer to be "clothed upon" once more with flesh and blood, and to live before her hearers once again his sad and

Were we to criticise such a fine portrayal at all, it would be in regard to what was said of Dante's young manhood and his marriage. Is it true that Dante was not in almost every respect the superior of the other "young Florentines of the better class of his day?" Dante was not only a genius, but in all respects superior. He was superbly endowed, from his very cradle, above his fellows. Then, too, is there any warrant for supposing that Dante fell in with the "fast" life of the young Florentine rakes of the "better class" who filled her streets with ever recurring brawls, and her society with liaisons? We have never heard a more graphic and vivid portrayal of the uplifting transforming, restraining power of a "supreme affection" for a noble woman upon a true man than that which fell from Mrs. Williams's lips last night in describing Dante's absorbing love for Beatrice. But how old was Dante when this absorbing passion took possession of him? He was only nine years of age and Beatrice eight? Of the effect of that first meeting on himself Dante tells us: "At that moment I saw most truly that the spirit of life which hath its dwelling in the secretest chambers of the heart began to tremble so violently that the least pulses of my body shook therewith; and in trembling it said these words, 'Ecce deus fortior me qui veniens dominabitur mihi.'" From that moment this "absorbing passion" ruled him. Is it possible that thus ruled by this supreme affection the naturally noble nature of Dante could be led into the follies and excesses of the young Florentines of the better class? If Dante sowed wild oats at all it must have been before he was nine years of age. And again what was said by the lecturer in regard to Dante's marriage with Gemma Donati, that it was a marriage of convenience and unhappy, is open to question. In a masterly article on Dante Oscar Browning says: "It is possible that Gemma Donati is the lady mentioned in Vita Nuova as sitting full of pity at her window and comforting Dante for his sorrow. There is no reason to suppose that she was other than a good wife, or that the union was otherwise than happy." But aside from a few such points as these Mrs.

Williams' delineation of the character and work of Dante was a masterly one. This was the universal verdict of those who heard her. At the conclusion of the lecture Mr. Cruzan announced that a Ladies' Class for Literary study, to meet five Saturday mornings, had already been formed, and would meet Mrs. Williams at Hon. C. R. Bishop's at 10 A. M. to-day; and also that a course of five evening lectures on historical and literary subjects is contemplated. Tickets for each course, $3. Those who desire to join the Ladies' Class can do so by applying to Mrs. Wm. Allen; and those who are willing to subscribe to the course of lectures should apply to Hon. W. R. Castle.

SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1887.

FROM LONDON TO SYDNEY, 1865-66.

BY A SHIP'S OFFICER.

Probably the most pleasurable part of a seaman's life, is the time he spends on shore. This may seem an anomaly, but it is a fact, nevertheless. But it often happens that a few months at sea may be pleasantly and profitably employed. This was my experience at any rate. In the month of November, 1865, I was second officer of the tea clipper Young Lochinvar, one of the extreme clippers that were built in those days for the special purpose of conveying the new season's teas from China to London. She was 720 tons register and carried a complement of forty hands, all told, a number deemed sufficient to man three ships of her size of the present day. All tea clippers of those days carried large crews; they were heavily rigged and spread an enormous amount of canvas.

The Young Lochinvar had made her maiden voyage to China and back, and had obtained the reputation of a fast sailer. She had turned out her cargo of tea in splendid condition, and was lying in the East India docks, London, preparatory to loading again for the East. To my surprise, one morning, I found her flying the black ball flag of Messrs, James Baines & Co., with a huge poster on her gangway announcing that she was on the berth for Sydney, N. S. W., the cabins required to be somewhat altered in order to make the necessary arrangements for passengers. The work was quickly accomplished and in less than a fortnight we were haul-ing out of the dock and ready to be towed to sea.

The scene of a passenger ship bound to Australia leaving the docks, is a sight never to be forgotten. On the pier heads, stand uncles and aunts, cousins and sis-ters, come to bid a last farewell to those who are bound to the Antipodes. The weeping and wailing on both sides is sufficient to melt the heart of a Trojan. Amongst those on board are unvariably to be found, the young bride and bride-groom, the wife in search of her runaway husband, the old married couple going to join there advensuch was the few who sought to hooked on, and the order to turn ahead being given, the passengers and there friends were parted withnightfall the Downs were in sight, foremost into the ser about this time the wind was piping up from the westward, but the vessel's course was continued onward in spite of the increasing gale. About lifty ships lay in Downs, weather bound, but at the request of our anxious and pushing captain, the pilot continued his course seaward with the tugboat still ahead. After passing the Straits of Dover, it now being dark, sail was made and the tow-line hauled in. The passengers had long sought their quarters below, but the crew continued to work the ship in those narrow waters throughout the whole wind howling from the westward. to reach wider sea-room before daylight. He was persevering, and no doubt in his own mind, thought he was doing the correct thing, but what about the poor crew who were beginning to feel worn out, as any human being would do after the racketing that pilot gave them. When daylight broke the following morning, the vessel was abreast of Beachy Head, but the increasing head wind prevented her from making further headway to the westward. Each member of that crew prayed within his own heart that the pilot would think better of it and turn back, as further progress onward seemed impossible. The channel pilot was at last moved, and he complied with the entreaties of the crew to seek refuge in the Downs, The vessel's course was changed, and in a few hours she was safely anchored with ninety fathoms of chain. A few of the emigrants have came up and had a look around, wondering where they had been and where they were. The fortune, however, smiled upon them for the time, and on reaching Their several appearances indicated comparatively smooth water, they thought all there troubles were In two or three days the gale was over, and the anchor was once more weighed and the voyage pursued. With fine weather we soon sped down the channel and when off the Isle of Wight, signals were made for a pilot-boat to take our pilot off. It was at this particular moment that a happy thought occurred to one of our young lady passengers, the one who was in search of her runaway husband, that she had gone far enough in that direction. She begged of the cap-

a slight change in the condition of their stomachs, and as the vessel

now rode quietly at anchor in tain to allow her to go on shore with the pilot, pleading as an excuse that her husband was a good-fornothing fellow, and was not worthy of the agony she had suffered during the past forty-eight hours. She also added that there were plenty more husbands to be got in the neighborhood of her little home at Kensington. All of her entreaties, however, were of no avail. The pilot left the ship, whilst the poor young wife buried herself in tears at being compelled to pursue her journey. Nothing was seen of her for a few days, but when fine weather set in, she forgot her troubles and looked as charming as she possibly could. For several days nothing was seen of the bulk of the passengers, but when running down the North-east trades, warmer weather had set in, they all came on deck to breath the pure fresh air. That common enemy to mankind—seasickness had been conquered for the time being. It was whilst in this belt of fine weather that Christmas Day came around. An awning was spread over the quarter deck, and passengers and crew joined in a grand chorus!

"Hark the Herald Angels sing, Glory to the new-born King." Nothing occurred to mar the happiness of all on board that day, and each and everyone confessed to having spent a "Happy Christmas."

The Equator was crossed in due course, and the old time custom of interviewing Neptune, was introduced, but without any of its unpleasant accompaniments.

Before we had crossed the Southeast trades, I had made the acquaintance of all the lady cabin passen-gers, and began to feel that life at sea with pleasant company on board is not such a bug-bear as one's nautical ancestors would make you believe. The passengers had all gained their sea legs, and it was not an unfrequent scene to see the young ladies promenading the poop deck like an officer on watch. Often whilst I have been keeping first watch from 8 to 12 o'clock in the evening, I have found the time fly by, so pleasantly, that I would willingly have stood the watch over again. The voyage, however, was not entirely devoid of sad scenes, one of which is so strongly impressed on my mind that I consider it worth relating. It was while running down the Easting, the wind blowing strongly from the South-west, the fore turous sons, and the poor curate top-gallant sail split. Orders were with a wife and a large family going at once given for it to be sent down in search of their daily bread. Of and a new sail to be bent. No time was lost in carrying out the skipper's reach Australia by the Young orders, but as the work of bending Lochinvar. The tugboat having the new sail did not come up to the boatswain's idea of how such a job should be done, he took occasion to belate the the sailors engaged in out further ceremony. A few wav- the job. He finally went up aloft ing handkerchiefs were the last to see what all the delay was signs of a final adieu. With a about. On stepping from the strong ebb-tide, Gravesend was soon | rigging on to the topgallant yard he was rounded to, at great risk, and a boat lowered, but the body was never afterwards seen. This sad affair cast a great gloom over the whole ship's company. The deceased had been a great favorite with both passengers and crew, and his sudden loss was a severe blow. He was a large hearted British sailor of the true stamp, and left a young wife to monrn his loss. With fair wind and favorable weather, Sydney Heads were sighted on the seventy-fifth day after leaving London. The passengers were cestaciessome at reaching their old home, of that terrible night. Terrible, it and others at finding a new home was in more senses than one, the for their future life. After entering the port in tow of the tug boat while the gallant ship under reefed upper topsails, nobly fought her way inch by inch, the pilot hoping tions to land. In less than an hour tions to land. In less than an hour after the anchor was let go, they had all gone. It was then that a feeling of solitude pervaded the after part of that vessel. Those with whom we had been in daily contact for a period of two months and a half, with whom mutual > ported to London and sail the voyage again. The good ship's days, as well as the happy voyage to the Colonies which I have attempted to relate, were also near at end. Within two months after leaving Sydney the Young Lochinvar was lost in the China Seas, the crew having a miraculous escape from sudden death. them for the time, and on reaching Foochow, they were eventually paid off at the British Consulate in May, 1866, Mr. J. E. Brown, now a resident in this city, officiating on behalf of the ship's agents.

WHO IS MOTHER SEIGEL?

She is a lady who, by the merest accident, has made a most valuable discovery, and she is creating the wildest enthu-lasm all over the country, and everybody is talking about her and asking WHAT IS MOTHER SEIGEL'S REPU-TATION?

and she tells them to read the thousands of letters, something like the following from Mr Perkins:—

A WONDERFUL TESTIMONIAL.

"Grove Pharmacy, Ealing, W.
Jah. 2, 1885.

"Your medicine must be the most won leriel, for during my experience of more than twenty years, I never knew any proprietary or paten medicine in such universal favor and demand. It is simply extraordinary, and if I were to send you an account of every statement made to me in its favor, you would have to publish a separate book to contain my testimonials alone. "THOMAS J. PERKINS" (Signed)

And then people ask-

WHAT DOES MOTHER SEIGEL DO? GIVES RELIEF A ONCE.

"Jan. 7, 1885.
"I find the sale of your medicine increases every yea, and everyone speaks well of them that tries them. I know a hady that attended the Female Hospital in Soho-square for some months, with pains in back and, side and billous, and could take no food, but got no benefit from any of the medicines they gave her. Before she had taken all the contents of one bottle of your Syrup she felt relief and is now quite well.

(Signed) "W. K. BAKER."

THE EFFECT WAS MARVELLOUS. "Medical Hall, Bangor, Jan. 5, 1885.

"I heur reopic constantly speaking very highly of Seigel's Syrup. There is a case of a young married lady in Anglescy who had been suffering from stomach asthma for a long period, who had consulted some of the best physicians of the day, but without deriving any benefit. She was daily getting worse, but at last a friend persuaded best to try Seigel's Syrup. She procured worse, but at last a friend persuaded hea to try Scigel's Syrup. She procured a bottle, and the effect was marvellous; she ratidly improved, and now sho is as strong and healthy as ever she has "H. LLOYD-JONES." (Signed)

WHAT IS MOTHER SEIGEL GOOD DOES NOT RESTORK THE DEAD, BUT SAVES

THE LIVING. Mr. J. W. Savill. of Dunmow, Essex, writes—September 1834;—"I introduced writes—September 18:4;—"I introduced your medicines into Duumow almost as soon as they were brought out in Lon don. I sold in a short time eighteen pounds' worth, I have known many grand cases of permanent cures; and, as yet, no case af failure. Nothwithstanding many competitors, Mother Seigel's Syrup holds its own ground. I believe it a good medicine—it will not restore the dead to life, but appears to save the living from dying."

A CASE OF GRAVEL CORED.

"Feltham, Jan. 6, 1885. "It has always given me pleasure to recommend your medicines to my custorecommend your medicines to my customers, and the results of their use have invariably been most satisfactory. I could furnish you many testimonials. One case just now occurs to my mind. A constable of the police force of Tooting, S. W., where I for many years had a shop, was a patient of mine, suffering from a bad attack of gravel. He was persuaded to try Mother Siegel's Syrup.' He purchased a bottle at my shop, and by the time he had taken half of it he reported upself to me as guite cared. reported qimself to me as quite cured.
The effect was simply miraculous.
(Signed) "J. D. FLORANCE."

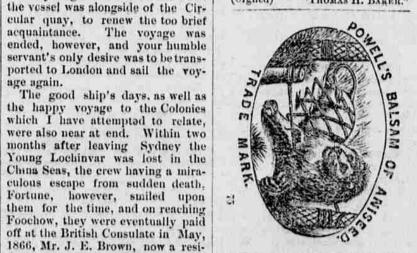

IS MOTHER SEIGEL RELIABLE? Would resecctable chemists write like the following if not?

A SURGICAL OPERATION AVERTED. "Ticehurst, Dec., 1884. Mr. EDWARD CORRE, Chemist, writes "Your medicine maintains a steady sale in this district, and is well established in general favor. I know an old a an over seventy, who some three or four years ago was advised to submit to the operation for stone. He cortainly was suffe ing from ome distressing symptoms, and could scarcely walk. Instead of taking that advice he tried Siegel's Syrup, with the result that after one bottle, he could walk about fairly well, and, having taken three or four 2s. 6d. bottles, he was completely cured. He is still about, hale and hearty for his years. If any f the symptoms of the old trouble come on, he takys a few doses of the Syrup, and all is well again."

WHAT PEOPLE SAY ABOUT MOTHER SEIGEL.

AN EXPERIENCE OF FORTY YEARS.

"Cosham, Hants, Jad. 2, 1835. "My customers, over a wide country district, are not very demonstrative, and I have no written testimonials to send; but verbal admiration of your medicine is in the ascendant, and my experience of forty years' assures me that no preparation has so rapidly acquired a pop-ularity, and so firmly maintaint its reputation as Mother Seigel's Syrup.
(Signed) "THOMAS H. BAKER."
