INTER ISLAND WILL BUILD

HANDSOME OFFICE BUILDING IN PROSPECT.

Ground to Be Broken Next Week—Island Stone Will Be Used in Its Erection—Fine Carved Work.

Ground will be broken early next week for the new Inter Island Company office building on the makai side of Queen street, about 100 feet from Fort. The building is to be of native stone and pressed brick, two stories in height, and will cost when completed something over $30,000. The architects are Howard & Train, and they have designed what is destined to be the handsomest exclusive office building in town.

The building is to be occupied exclusively by the Inter Island Steamship Company, and has been planned especially to meet the needs of a growing business. The front of the structure, extending a distance of 60 feet on Queen street, will be of native stone and pressed brick. The main entrance in the center, opening into a broad corridor leading to the main offices, will be a very handsome affair, supported by polished stone columns. The second floor front is broken by a number of polished stone columns with carved capitals, and a picturesque stone balcony, finely carved, extends almost across the front of the building.

The lower floor is divided by a broad corridor into two splendidly lighted rooms, each 22x60 feet. The offices will be on the Ewa side, the general office in front lighted by a plate glass window that takes up almost the entire front of the building. The counter in the general office will be of hard wood, highly polished, and protected by polished plate glass, set in bronze gilt work. The store room on the Waikiki side will be occupied by the chandlery department, as will also the entire second floor, connected with the lower floor by a winding iron stairway, and in the rear by an elevator. A covered driveway will extend along the Ewa side of the building to an open space in the rear. This driveway opens from the street through heavy bronze gates, beautifully designed. The building will present a very handsome appearance from the outside, and within will be furnished with the best of material. Work upon it will probably be pushed rapidly, as the present quarters of the company are rather cramped.

FLESH BEGAN TO PEEL.

Exciting Tug of War Lasting Nearly an Hour and a Half.

Four strong natives and three Portuguese, employees of H. Hackfeld & Co., and five natives and two Portuguese working for the Hawaiian Carriage Company, fought for supremacy in a tug of war pull on Tuesday night for one hour and twenty minutes. The contest was won by the Hackfeld employees. The pull was intensely exciting from beginning to end. The Carriage boys were aggressive, and had the rope four inches to the better for half an hour. So hard was the strain, that the flesh began peeling off their hands, when they were obliged to weaken and the Hackfeld Men quickly pulled them over.

The Carriage boys are not satisfied and have issued a challenge for $100 a side. The challenge will be accepted. As yet the Honolulu foundry team has not replied to the challenge issued to them by the Portuguese team.

BISHOP ESTATE TRUSTEE

SUPREME COURT TAKES CASE UNDER ADVISEMENT.

The Question Argued Is Whether Decision of Judge Carter Releasing Mr. Damon Will Stand.

After listening to the exhaustive arguments of the attorneys in the suit of S. M. Damon against Charles M. Hyde, the Supreme Court took the matter under consideration today. Paul Neumann defended Mr. Damon, and Kinney & Ballou represented for Dr. Hyde.

The suit is the outgrowth of the resignation of Mr. Damon from the Board of Trustees of the Bishop trust. Dr. Hyde, on behalf of the other trustees, protested, but Circuit Judge Carter granted Mr. Damon permission to resign. The case was then appealed to the higher tribunal.

The case was instituted in the lower court just a few days prior to Mr. Damon's departure for England to represent the Republic of Hawaii at Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee. He stated to the court his reasons for resigning, which were satisfactory enough. One of the contentions advanced by Mr. Damon was that with his absence there would not be a quorum of the trustees to act and if some one were appointed in his stead this difficulty would be avoided.

Dr. Hyde and the other trustees protested, replying to Mr. Damon that there was no need of his resigning, as W. F. Allen, a member of the board, who was then absent in Japan would return in good time to make the quorum.

The outcome of the suit in the highest court is patiently awaited by many people who are interested in the controversy.

WANT TO BE NIGGERS.

A nigger minstrel show which will eclipse anything of the kind ever given in Honolulu is scheduled for September, probably regatta night. It will be fostered by the military and will be under the direct auspices of Company D. Major McCarthy will be chairman of the general committee and Major Jones will be a member of the same committee. Gus Murphy will be in charge of the show, while the best talent in the city will participate. The show will likely be given in the opera house.

AT IOLANI COLLEGE.

HOT FOOT AFTER POLICE

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS ARE GOING ROUND.

Some People Claim That the Sailors Do Not Get a Fair Deal—Investigation To Be Instituted.

A Fort street business man is circulating a subscription list about the city with the view of raising a fund with which to fight the Police Department.

The list calls for donations to a fund to employ counsel which will cause an investigation in the Courts of the alleged claims of brutality and assault made upon white men and sailors by the native police.

It is proposed to retain Humphreys & Macdonald. The junior member of this firm devoted considerable of his time since his admission to the bar of the Hawaiian Courts in defending Uncle Sam's sailors, who claim that they have been badly treated at the hands of the Honolulu police. For this reason the subscribers believe that Mr. Macdonald's services in the crusade against the police will be very valuable.

The subscription list was quite generally circulated during the day and has a number of signers for amounts ranging from $10 down.

Just what plan the attorneys will pursue in bringing about an investigation is not known.

STAR'S PROTEST SUSTAINED.

The League Desires Umpire Whitney Was in the Wrong.

The baseball league decided at a special meeting this afternoon to sustain the protest of Captain Wilder of the Star team against the umpire's decision in the "blocked ball" incident, now famous of last Monday's game. As a result the game must be considered a drawn game, and must be played over again next Saturday.

The members of the St. Louis College aggregation are very much dissatisfied with the decision of the league, and assert that they will not again meet the Star team. It is generally believed, however, that they will forgo the "baby act" before next Saturday and bow to the decision of the league. The feeling on both sides has been very bitter, and the chances are that if the teams meet in another match it will be the hottest game of the season. The Star and St. Louis teams are now tied for first place.

WILL SEE THE ISLAND.

The Carnegie boys of Pittsburgh, Pa., J. G. Vailbel, and R. C. Peterson, left this morning for a tour of Oahu Island. They will return to the city on Saturday or Sunday. The Carnegies expect to sail for Tahiti on the yacht Norma, next week.

A LONDON VIEW.

The Daily Graphic says: "Had England been in the position of the United States, she would probably have annexed Hawaii years ago."

DID NOT PROSECUTE.

Marshal Brown refused to prosecute the cases against the Philadelphia marines in the Police Court this morning. If the court did not see fit to believe the testimony of the native police in the Kane case yesterday, he said, there was little chance that he would take any stock in similar testimony today. So the cases were nolle prossed.

HAWAIIAN MISSION CHILDREN.

The Hawaiian Mission Children's Society will hold its regular meeting at the home of Mrs. C. B. Damon on Beretania street on Saturday of this week, at 7:30 p. m.

JAPS COMING.

Nearly 250 Japanese contract laborers are expected on the next steamship from Japan, the first to arrive here in many weeks. Of the number expected 75 are for George Boardman and the remainder for a local Japanese agency.

A report has been current that a Japanese tramp steamer is daily expected with 600 contract and free laborers. This cannot be confirmed at the Government offices, and is emphatically denied by the local agents of immigration companies.

"WHEELER & WILSON."

The name "Wheeler & Wilson" is a household word and the machine a necessity. It is the same as everything else handled by L. B. Kerr. The best to be had.

NO MORE FAMINE IN INDIA

GOVERNMENT RELIEF IS FULLY ORGANIZED.

Interesting Interview With an Indian Tea Planter—His Views On Coffee Planting In Hawaii.

G. Paterson, a tea planter who has spent many years in India, and is now on his way to England to visit his old home, is now in the city. He left India less than four months ago, after passing through the heart of the famine district, and has some very interesting stories to tell of the famine. Mr. Paterson is a typical Englishman. He went out to India about fifteen years ago and engaged in the tea business. He was successful, and is now on his way home, after a tour through China and Japan, and a prospective visit to the United States.

"Recent reports sent out in regard to the famine in India have been greatly exaggerated," said Mr. Paterson to a reporter for The Star. "We did have a bad year in many populous districts and for a time there was a great deal of suffering, but it was never so bad as painted. For many months past, however, the Government has had the matter well in hand, and there is no longer any starvation. Famines are not uncommon in India after a bad year, and the Government has long ago learned how to manage them."

"Take our district, for instance. The Government has its food warehouses at convenient points from which food is distributed daily. The matter is managed entirely by the white men in the district. We have a regular organization, and every one of us is compelled by law to do a certain amount of what we call 'relief duty.' The district is patrolled and the hungry ones sought out. All who are able visit the storehouses daily, and receive a certain amount of food. Of course there is no feasting, but the rations served out are sufficient to supply the actual wants of the people and there is no actual suffering."

Mr. Paterson has recently visited the coffee belt of Hawaii, and is greatly pleased with the outlook there. "Were I a young man," he said, "just starting out in business, I would not hesitate for a moment about going into the coffee business on Hawaii. I have had a great deal of experience in the planting business, and it is my judgment that there is a great opening for a young man on Hawaii. The successful growth of coffee there is assured. Planters need have no fear of trouble in handling their crop when it is ready. Before that time the conditions will be so changed that there will be plenty of labor in the market. The planters in the Olua district might greatly benefit themselves by organization. They are not rivals in business, and an exchange of experiences might be very beneficial."

GLEE CLUB PLEASED.

The De Koven Glee Club made its initial appearance at the American literary exercises in the Opera House on Monday morning. The club has been organized a little more than a month. Twenty young men belong to it. Dr. Burgess is the leader.

"DOMESTIC."

There is no necessity to add the words sewing machine in speaking of the "Domestic." Every housekeeper knows that the "Domestic" is what L. B. Kerr claims it to be—the best in the world.

"The thing I especially enjoyed after a somewhat lengthy sojourn on the other very precious with the landlady charging sixpence a scuttle for coal. I remember sitting around a stove in an English hotel.

The weather was cold, and the coal in the stove bunched together. I took a poker and stirred it up."
"That makes it burn faster," commented the landlord gravely.
"That's just what I want," I replied.
"A red faced, hearty Englishman broke in, 'You Americans are deucedly thin blooded, don't you know?'"
"Then in Italy you shiver about all winter, and in Germany those big, high crockery stoves never seem to thaw you out. So when I arrived in America in midwinter I had a jolly big fire in the room at my hotel and I piled on the coal, knowing that it would not break my bank, in spite of the prices of the big, abominable coal trust. But after one has paid sixpence a scuttle for a mighty little scuttle of coal he does not feel disposed to criticise the trust. I felt like a lord, 'thin blooded American' though I might be, and was just in the mood to read and appre-

not seem half so pleasing when read before

KEEP IN TOUCH.

The government of a country owe it to their supporters to meet matters with a firm hand. In private life, a man may be weak and vacillating and he injures no one save himself and those immediately depending upon him. A government by vacillation or weakness wrecks a state and its prosperity along with it. Thus there is one special quality required in rulers, and that is backbone.

A remark made by Minister Sewall in his speech on the Fourth of July should be laid to heart by both rulers and ruled. He said, "God forbid that any of you ever make the 'till' your fatherland." The "till" should not be made the measure or standard of a government when it is dealing with questions of vital interest to the whole body politic. In such matters it is not expediency, but abstract right that should be considered. A course having been adopted, a course which all men approve and appreciate, it should not be departed from upon moving pictures of future woes drawn by a few whose pockets are likely to be wrung.

The rumor is abroad that the Cabinet of Hawaii, after maintaining a firm policy is beginning to weaken, and that this weakening is in direct opposition to advice which comes from quarters where there is better opportunity of understanding this trend of events than there is in Hawaii itself. The firm supporters of the Government trust that this is mere baseless rumor, and that the Cabinet, which has shown its power of backbone in many a difficulty, which has steered the bark of the Republic safely in very troubled waters, will not break a record that has doubled its supporters and made them thoroughly devoted to its cause.

The Star feels satisfied that the rumor is baseless, but, as it is going round the town, it would be an advantage to the Cabinet if it gave out in an authoritative manner, its policy. A Cabinet should keep in constant touch with its supporters. Its strength lies in holding their minds firm in the lines on which it is acting and in satisfying itself that they agree in those lines. Much friction might be avoided if that official secrecy with which bureaux like to surround themselves, was swept away. The affairs are affairs of the public, not of a small bureaucracy, which is here today and gone tomorrow. The republic remains forever. In the United States, the touch is kept up by the interview, in England by the after-dinner speech. Modelled on the United States the interview is the best method of keeping in touch here.

THE TRUE INWARDNESS.

The only reason assignable for Japan making the absurd claim that her subjects had not only a chance of a vote but that some of them really had it, is that the Empire has been blinded by her own wishes. That such is the case is the only explanation. Consul General Fuji remarked, when the Constitution was promulgated, that its framers had got ahead of him. They excluded the Japanese without mentioning them by name, and it must be remembered that Mr. Fuji was anxious that his countrymen should have the vote.

Failing in this, the plan of Japan was to fill the Islands with laborers, immigrants, students, call them what you will, and then to turn upon this country, and by judicious agitation demand a change in the constitution and the granting of the vote. There is information at hand which goes to show that, had not the Government firmly put its foot down, when it did, within the then ensuing six months no less than 6000 Japanese would have been landed upon these shores.

The case is one in which, without actually showing her hand, the power in question was quite ready to obtain a foothold of immense strength upon the Islands, which could be afterwards used as a political lever for aggressive action. The true nature of the scheme must be quite clear to those who are at the head of affairs in the United States. Japan's real inspirations are patent in spite of all her denials of any desire for territorial expansion. Duplicitous has ever been the diplomatic arm of the East, as a century or less ago, it was the diplomatic arm of the West, and it looks very much as if the veneer of modern Western methods which Japan has acquired serves only to hide, for a space, the true inward Asiatic.

All this has been doubtless been made clear by Minister Hattdi at Washington, but it is as well to understand here on the ground.

There is one mistake about the various "write ups" of our volcano. Unless the lava is slopping over the rim and rushing around in cascades and huge waves the volcano is put down as inactive. As a fact it is never inactive. It gives a more gorgeous display at some times than it does at others, but as a great natural phenomena it is always there. It is well worth the cost of a trip to see the crater itself even if it were really inactive, which it has never yet been. The crater suffers from lucid description and pens dipped in vermilion ink. As a natural phenomenon it is grand at any time.

Dr. Parkhurst, whose name for the last few years has been extolled and execrated not only in New York, which was the field of his operations, but all over the United States, has announced that he has retired from the active field of politics. Naturally this announcement has called forth many comments, but, as the Republican Standard says, "no man ever accomplished much for this world without being criticised." That Dr. Parkhurst was always judicious no one will claim. But he had an ideal and he worked hard for it through good and evil report. He made men think about their civic duties, and in this he accomplished far more than he did by his actual campaigns.

There has been a great deal said about the school histories of the United States. On the one hand they are charged with keeping alive the feeling between Great Britain and the great republic, and on the other with refusing to bury the hatchet between the North and the South. Now come the silverites and object strongly to the expression "gold" where "coin" would be the more accurate term. The writers of school histories have anything but a peaceful time of it and have received blows from the church, the state and the bimetalists. There is no telling who will fall foul of them next. Here the work was ably done by Professor Alexander, but even his "Brief History of the Hawaiian People," carefully written as it was to avoid all chance of controversy, has fallen under the ban of some disgruntled ones.

A Living Flytrap.

"The big alligator in our menagerie," the old circus man said, "didn't always take his feed very well. Sometimes he wouldn't open his mouth at feeding time, and then we had to resort to strategy. Alligators are very sensitive about the nose. When this alligator wouldn't open his mouth, we used to rub the top of his nose very gently. That always made him mad, and he'd throw back his upper jaw like a cellar door on hinges. Then we'd throw a chunk of beef, maybe five pounds or so, down his throat, and down would come the cellar door shut again, and he would swallow the beef. In that way we used to give him about 25 pounds of beef at a feeding without much difficulty."

"The old alligator was very fond of flies. You might think a fly would be pretty small game for a 12 foot alligator, and one fly would be. But this old alligator would throw his upper jaw back and go to sleep apparently. Flies would light around inside the alligator's mouth just the same as they would anywhere outdoors, and when there were about a million there the alligator would shut his upper jaw down with the flies all inside. Pretty soon he'd throw the cellar door back and set the trap again."

"I've often thought that alligators would make good flytraps for houses. Of course you'd want to keep any small child from them, but if you looked out for that I should think they'd be great. I should say that about four 12 foot alligators could keep a moderate sized house free of flies all summer without the slightest trouble."

Timely Topics.

JULY 3, 1897.

Since our last announcement the Iolani has arrived with a very heavy cargo of kerosene oil and in consequence the price has dropped, making the using of oil stoves more economical than ever.

The demand for BLUE FLAME Oil Stoves has been so heavy that it has been almost impossible to carry a stock large enough to supply the call.

Where formerly we had on the two styles, we now have three sizes, the third size being smaller than the other two.

The PORTABLE DEITZ OIL STOVE is built on the same lines as the coal and wood stoves, with the exception that it consumes oil. This stove is complete with oven, kettle and stew pan. We have smaller styles in one, two and three burners for heating milk etc., that comes in handy when not wishing to cook a full meal.

In coal and wood stoves and ranges we have the Olive, Bono and Pansy in three sizes which are household jewels; in larger stoves or ranges the No. 7 Fisher Steel Range, Columbus Nos. 7 and 8, and the Empire City an excellent range for country hotels, restaurants and coffee shops. It is not boasting when we say that is a hard matter to find a better assortment of stoves of all kinds, sizes and prices than we handle.

IT WAS GREAT

And it made a hit worth remembering, did our float, "Love in a Cottage," in the procession on Monday. It was an illustration of a kitchen furnished by us. It showed how completely that part of the home may be furnished by us at the lowest possible cost.

If you remember it, the Jewel stove stood supreme in the cottage and if you had inquired of the young housekeeper who occupied the cottage, she would have told you that as a fuel saver, the Jewel is the best ever brought into the country. She would have told you that it is the best baker she ever had in the house. The breadwinner in the cottage would have told you that the biscuits he ate along the line of march, baked in the Jewel were quite as good as those "his mother used to make." The Jewel is the best in every respect and the cheapest, for the money ever put on the market.

STERILIZED MILK.

Recent Investigations Have Strengthened the Arguments in Its Favor.

Although milk has so frequently been held responsible for the dissemination of diphtheria, yet curiously but few exact investigations have been made on the behavior of diphtheria bacilli in milk. Hesse found that cholera bacilli underwent deterioration in raw milk; that, in fact, when kept in these surroundings at a temperature of 37 degrees C. (98 F.), they were entirely destroyed within 22 hours. Caro of Naples, on the other hand, working with anthrax bacilli in raw milk, states that these microbes flourish abundantly in milk and abate no jot of their virulence under these conditions. Professor Schottelius has repeated these experiments and has entirely confirmed them. He has, however, extended his investigations to the behavior of diphtheria bacilli in milk.

In a recent number of The Centralblatt für Bakteriologie, Part I, a summarized account is given of these researches, and it appears that in fresh milk diphtheria bacilli find an exceptionally satisfactory material for growth and multiplication. In sterilized milk, however, their growth was not so abundant and was less strongly marked than in the ordinary broth used for cultivation purposes. As the milk was only sterilized for half an hour by means of the ordinary Soxhlet apparatus, this difference in the vitality of the diphtheria bacilli in the raw and heated milk, respectively, could not have been due to the milk having become acid through heating. Hesse has shown that when milk is subjected to prolonged sterilization at a high temperature it exhibits an acid reaction. Professor Schottelius concludes his paper with a warning, now so often repeated, of the danger attending the consumption of milk in its raw, unsterilized condition.—Nature.

It is better to spend a little money in advertising now, than to hold a fire sale at a latter date.

U.S. PRESS ON ANNEXATION

MOST AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS FAVOR IT.

Strong Reasons Advanced for the Amalgamation of Hawaii—Republican and Democratic Papers 'Alike Favor the Cause.

The spirit of the American press on the absorption of the Hawaiian islands by the Greater Republic, will have an immense weight. The newspapers generally heartily endorse President McKinley's action.

Here are a few cuttings: If there are any real grounds for the apprehensions expressed by the opponents of the Hawaiian treaty, they are assuredly outweighed by the great considerations of national policy which are invoked in its support."—Newark Advertiser.

"The annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States as a component part of the territory of the latter is one of the wisest and most fortunate steps that has been taken by this country in a long time."—Scranton (Pa.) Truth.

"The annexation of Hawaii to the United States will be a good thing for this country and a good thing for Hawaii. It will add to our possessions a rich and fertile group of islands and a Pacific coaling station of inestimable value, while it will shield Hawaii from the danger of English, German and Japanese aggression, to which it has been exposed."—Brooklyn Times.

"Bad as the bargain seems on the surface, we incline to the belief that there is nothing to be lost by the annexation of the Sandwich Islands. The proposition is not half so objectionable as the acquisition of Alaska seemed thirty years ago, at a cost of over $7,000,000, but the United States wouldn't take ten times $7,000,000 for it today."—Philadelphia Times.

"Thus far sugar has been the great staple of export from Hawaii, but coffee is gaining ground rapidly, and bids fair to eclipse sugar as the great agricultural product of those islands. The volcanic soil and hot sun favor the profitable cultivation of the coffee bean. The quality is said to be excellent. But whatever those islands are best adapted for they should form an integral part of the United States.

The last four years have strengthened the annexation sentiments of the country."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"The treaty should be ratified now. There should be no postponement till winter. The American flag should float over Hawaii before the summer is ended."—Chicago Tribune.

"With Hawaii once in the Union, Japan would no more think of playing the Hector at Honolulu than at San Francisco. So much for the political reason for annexation. It is a strong one."—New York Press.

"From the present point of view the proposed annexation is desirable, and we are glad the Connecticut Senators are in favor of it."—New Haven Register.

STRENGTH OF DEMOCRACY.

Rev. D. P. Birnie Gave an Appropriate Discourse Sunday Evening.

An able discourse on the strength and weakness of Democracy was delivered by Rev. Douglas P. Birnie at the United Lincoln Church Sunday evening. He said in part:

"Tonight on this anniversary of the independence of the United States of America we shall consider simply the last form of rule—that of democracy. The mighty Republic of America stands before the world to-day as the most conspicuous attempt on the part of the people to govern themselves, and we ask in profound seriousness what is the strength and where lies the weakness of democracy?"

"There was a time when culture was confined to the favored few; literature was bound up in manuscripts, and was the luxury of the rich. Now the printing press has put the treasures of the world into the hands of the masses, and he who can read has the door open before him to the best thought of the world. The engraver reproduces the painting, the photographer pictures the world, and the magazine, with its illustrations, can make every man a traveler."

"Permit me to name three sources of weakness in the current manifestation of democracy. The old idea was the divine right of Kings. The new teaching is the divine right of the majority. It merely transfers from the one to the many."

"The stress of battle today is in the field of economics. Why the few rich and the many poor? The marvelous advance in machinery and in discovery has lifted to thrones railroad kings. It is upon oil, sugar, electricity, that the modern uncrowned monarch has built his throne, and the bond holders whisper into the ears of Prime Ministers, and dictate foreign policy. The masses of the people are stirring. It is no passing fancy. The movement is as deep as life; the spirit of democracy is stirring in the politics of the world; her intellectual life is animated by it."

"A second false theory which is current among the crowd: 'All men are born equal.' This has been turned into the phrase of the street: 'One man is as good as another.' There is something of truth and much of falsehood. In the sight of God all men are equal. He is no respecter of persons."

"A third weakness in the present of the sense of responsibility. What is everybody's business, is nobody's business. The King is conspicuous. He is compelled to realize his responsibility. The officers in an oligarchy are known and the public understands where to lay the blame of failure, manifestation of democracy is a loss in a pure democracy the individual is lost in the mass. It is difficult to realize that one man can do anything."

In speaking of the tremendous power in the hands of monopolies, the speaker gave this vivid illustration: "If Adam were created 6000 years ago, and had lived till this time, and had succeeded in laying up $100 a day, for every working day of the 6000 years of his life, he would not, without interest, have made as much money in 6000 years as the elder Cornelius Vanderbilt is said to have made in his lifetime."

"This tremendous accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few gives enormous power, and is a source of great danger to democracy."

"I have only one seat," he said, "but I will willingly give it up to you." "Oh, thank you, how good you are. Really, I don't know what I have done to deserve such kindness. And where is the seat?" "At my home, where I enjoy drinking RAINER BEER. Phone 46."

MARY'S ROMANCE.

She was the neighborhood seamstress, a small, pale girl of quiet manners and infinite patience.

Mary was her name, and we all deemed it fitting. Her eyes were, as the village gossip put it, her only beauty. They were large and blue gray. There was a wistful sweetness in them that won the hearts of such of her patrons as occasionally let a thought stray from darts and leg o' muttons and reverts to the silent fashioner of the raiment.

Mary's unobtrusive personality was reflected in the gray gowns and hats which she always wore. Some of her employers, singular of face and figure and unlovely of character, might have found cause for complaint in their hiring's predilection for the sunshine and color and joy of life. So Mary adhered to nunlike shades and her remarks were confined to inquiries about the comfort giving qualities of the garments she manufactured.

She had come from the nearest city five years before. She had lived quietly "in rooms," and those who peddled sensations in their own "sets" found her humble little affairs of no concern. One or two would be gullants found she had a remarkable talent for aloofness. It was the same with the few young women who might have sought her society. The women whom she served regarded her as a cheap and skillful machine, and there their interest ended. Hers was a lonely life, and it was some unknown influence that kept her so well poised and quietly cheerful.

Mary had a romance. When asked about it, she responded with blushes and happy glances.

It was not very different from that of other girls as pure and patient as Mary. They had grown up together—that phrase that embraces so much of youthful hope and sympathy! Their parents had lived side by side. Hers died first. She had learned the trade from a city dressmaker and had come to the village because there were so many of her vocation in the big town. That was all, except that Frank, too, became an orphan and his task of getting through the law school had been doubly hard for that reason. He had just completed the task and was going to locate in the capital of the adjoining state. She could not see him so often now, but if all went well they would be together in a year. Then her little sister lived there with her aunt. Frank had never seen her, but they would soon be friends because of her.

"Is your sister like you, Mary?" asked the merchant's wife as she hemmed a ruffle overhand.

"Oh, no!" said the little seamstress. "I have not seen her since she was a child, but she was beautiful then. Frank cannot help liking her."

Mary told the rest of the story a year later with her head pillowed on her friend's broad bosom and her slender, gray figure shaken by the storm of a woman's great grief.

"Don't mind me, Mrs. Brown," she said when she felt big tears falling upon her hair. "It was probably for the best. She is a more suitable wife for Frank. I couldn't keep pace with him when I had to sew all day and in the evening, too, and she is so young and bright and lovely. She didn't know and he couldn't help loving her. Don't blame them."

The neighborhood seamstress, worn from her close companionship with the bright, slender needle that won for her bread, had yielded to her aunt's and sister's invitation and gone to the capital for a fortnight.

Besides, as she wrote Frank, it was high time she did some shopping in the city, for she "needed some of the things for her modest little outfit." Frank made no reference to this pretty little passage in his reply. She thought this was due to his absorption in his cares and tried not to be pained by the omission.

Her "little sister," grown into a wonderfully pretty young woman, and Frank were at the station to meet her. Ruby's greeting was warmly affectionate. The proprietress did not admit of Frank's being so, she knew, and she scolded herself for the dull little pain at her heart because it was so. She was glad to see on what friendly terms Frank and Ruby were. She was so glad they liked each other. But she had been sure they would.

"I found it out that evening," she sobbed. "It was only a little accident that told me they loved each other. But a woman's heart is clever, if her brain isn't. I had a good excuse for going to bed early, for I was tired from the journey. I never slept at all. Mrs. Brown, I could see how well Frank and Ruby looked together. The picture of them standing under the gaslight drove me nearly crazy. I knew she was a wife Frank could be proud of, and I wasn't. But my life was so empty without him. My love for him and plans for a little home of our own were the only bright things in it. I know why his letters had been so few and short when I saw him look at her that evening. I thought I would go mad that night. I believe I should have. But toward morning peace came to me—that kind of peace, you know, that comes after a storm on the ocean, that leaves the shore strewn with wrecks. Still it was peace. That came after I made up my mind to give him up."

"Oh, Mrs. Brown, it was so easy for him. He just said, 'I'm sorry, Mary,' but he looked as though he would have said, 'I am ashamed, Mary,' and he didn't ask me why. He knew I knew all about it, but she never did. Dear heart! I'm going to make the white dress over to fit her, and the other things too. Oh, yes, I will. You know, Mrs. Brown, I'm not used to it yet, and it breaks my heart to look at them. They will be married next month." They were. Mary's little seamstress, still lives in the village, but she has changed much. The blue of her eyes has faded into the gray, and we think sometimes her cheeks are taking on that ashen hue, or is it a reflection of her gown? She is as patient as ever, but not so strong. Poor little Mary!—Ada Patterson in St. Louis Republic.

HER ELOPEMENT.

Helen White had just come to Miss Minerva Sanderson's seminary. She was surprised to see a girl rush to a corner of the room and turn up the carpet, with an exclamation of "Here are two, one for you and one for me," holding up two letters.

Another girl, with a little ecstatic shriek, caught up her prize and tore it open.

Another young lady thus addressed Miss White:

"Biddy, the chambermaid, is our postman. She'll get all your love letters for you and bring them up on the sly."

"I haven't any love letters. I have no lover," said Helen, blushing.

"Your ma is strict, I suppose," said the other. "Well, you'll have plenty before you've been here six months."

Helen listened to the epistles, which her companions did not hesitate to read aloud.

She even helped one of the girls to answer hers, and she retired by the light of the long wax candle to read herself to sleep over a piece of literature by some French author.

So dawned a new life upon Helen White—a life her mother little dreamed of.

She also flirted. She also received love letters from strangers. She also subscribed to the library and read bad French books by the score.

To one of her admirers, who signed himself "Carlos," she wrote as a girl ought scarcely write to a betrothed lover.

Mrs. White was delighted with Helen's progress.

Miss Minerva gave her a volume, "The Guide to Young Ladies," as a prize for fine deportment, and nobody had any suspicion that her head was full of nonsense and her pockets full of love letters from an utter stranger, to whom she had told all the particulars of her life and the full extent of her fortune, and to whom she had given vows of eternal constancy, not exactly in black and white, for black ink was voted vulgar at Miss Minerva's, but in purple.

At last the climax arrived.

Carlos offered his hand and heart, and begged her to elope with him.

She read the letter aloud to Emma, Rose, Grace and Maria, and all in a flutter begged their advice on the matter.

"He says he's a prince," said Helen, with a glow on her cheeks, "and, you know, of course, I'll be a princess if I marry him, and, of course, we shall invite you to our castle. Last night I met him—I coaxed Biddy to watch and let me in—and he was splendid. He has a foreign accent and a black mustache."

"Oh," cried Maria, "I love a foreign accent!"

"And I've promised to run away with him tonight," said Helen. "He says ma will be sure to forgive us, and he's awfully rich. And, oh, how I feel, girls!"

And while Mrs. White, sitting with a dear friend who also had grown daughters, but who kept them at home, congratulated herself on dear Helen being safe at school, this affectionate daughter was packing up her small bundle in preparation for flight, aided and abetted by the four young ladies to whose example she owed so much.

Out into the moonlight hurried the young girl.

The white beams showed her pretty, foolish face pallid as that of a ghost.

She had never set foot in the street alone at such an hour before. A terror seized her—a sense of her own wickedness.

Perhaps she would have turned back, but that a figure in a cloak came at the moment from the shadow of a porch and seized her by the arm.

"Ah, my own Helen!" said a voice.

It was Carlos—Prince Carlos—her own prince.

Away they drove, how far Helen did not know. Suddenly the arm that encircled her was withdrawn and a voice said:

"Look here, young woman! No noise! I'll choke you if you try to scream. You have your watch and jewelry with you. I hope, and the money you promised to coax from your mother. Hand them over."

"Oh, it is not my Carlos!" cried Helen.

"Oh, what shall I do?"

"It is Carlos—at least it is the man you've been corresponding with," said the voice under the hat. "But I'm no prince, and no husband for you. Hand over the money and the jewelry and I'll not hurt you. I haven't much fancy for an idiot who would run off with a man she didn't know. Hurry! I'm waiting!"

She gave her purse, her watch and all her small possessions to the robber, who, with a loud laugh, gathered them up and jumped out of the carriage, calling to the driver:

"Take that girl back to the school, John, will you?"

Miss Helen White stood on the doorstep of Miss Minerva's seminary again, but not alone. With her stood the driver in a furious rage. He swore he would be paid, and rang the bell and battered the door until not only the servants, but Miss Minerva and four and twenty scholars appeared in the hall and on the stairway in all sorts of impromptu drapery, and, having decided that it was neither fire nor murder, opened the door to behold Miss White and her angry companion.

Miss Minerva, recognizing her scholar, darted forward, rescued her, slammed the door in the man's face, ordered the servants to guard it, and asked for explanations.

The explanation ended in a swoon on the part of Miss Minerva and hysterics on that of Helen White.

The next morning Charles stood before his sister with a peculiar expression on his face. In her lap she held a packet of letters which she had perused.

"My dear sister," said Charles, "all is as I have stated, and it is as well that, on the part of a gentleman, it was all a piece of acting. Helen was in earnest, and has no idea that her letters were from her uncle. That he, in a mustache and cloak, eloped with her, and wound up the affair by robbing her, or that the driver was his old friend Winter, who has daughters of his own, and who promised to wind up the affair in the most dreadful manner possible. You must, however, promise me to send for Helen tomorrow, and to keep the truth of this affair a secret, so that it may be a lifelong lesson to her."

And it was not until Helen was married that she learned that her love affair, elopement and desertion were all carried on by her uncle Charles, who knew what the result of boarding school flirtations might be.—New York News.

Niagara Outdone.

A Scotchman was taken by an American friend to visit Niagara falls. Already his feelings as a patriot had been a little frosted by the persistent blowing of his conductor on the greatness of things American. "Did you ever behold anything so wonderful as that?" asked the guide. "Aye, man, at Peebles I saw a peacock with a wadded leg," was the unexpected reply.—Homeside Words.

A QUICK TRANSITION.

Mr. Jason Johnson was intensely and unendlessly bored. It was really the only way open for his being uncomfortable, and he realized that he had traveled far along his monotonous path.

His gaze wandered around the walls of his splendid library, and he sighed as he recalled the interest he had once taken in collecting those familiar volumes, and the fine pictures, bric-a-brac and statuary—souvenirs of his foreign pilgrimages.

Five years before his elderly sister had come to reside over his household and him. She brought with her a young girl, whose dead mother had been her intimate friend, and for whose sake she had undertaken the care and guardianship of the child, who had been the sun of the household and comfort of her life—along with Providence and Jason. Indeed, it seemed that of these three it was Margaret Bright who usually ordered the affairs, domestic and social, in the establishment.

The master of the house was persistently endeavoring to discover why his life had become so uninteresting that no amount of variety seemed to impart spice thereto.

He drove, and derived physical benefit from the air and the management of his horses. But he could not say he found pleasure in the pastime. He played pool every evening because his physician advised it, but he played with the demoralization of a martyr who does his special sort of martyrdom particularly well. Occasionally he lectured before some literary society. He talked anything, from law to athletics, with the college youths who paid frequent visits to his brownstone mansion, when Margaret was at home. In winter he went south. In summer the Adirondacks or the Canadian forests yielded fish or game to his rod or gun. But of late he was obliged to confess that he was weary of these sports, and he did not consider it worth while to visit India and try tiger shooting as a last resource. So he bitterly reflected that he must have reached that time when some men discover that they are "no longer so young as they were."

This line of thought was interrupted by the entrance of his sister Della and her ward.

"Your sister has been telling me that you did not live here when you were a boy and that you were not always wealthy. I wish you to tell me about it," concluded this impetuous young woman.

"I was very poor and ambitious and—happy," he said, with an odd little smile as though he were joking instead of uttering the solemn and amazing truth. "Perhaps you would not care to hear of the struggle and the results."

(Again that queer flickering smile, and the very serious expression of the eyes seemed to contradict each other and puzzled the girl, who was watching his face.)

"But after I was graduated in law I found that I possessed just $10. I went to a prominent business man and told him I must have something to do. He might have given me a place as porter, but he gave me a less certain thing—a bad bill to collect. I called on the debtor. He was polite but unresponsive. I called again. He was suave, but, so far as yielding to my demands, as humbly as Gibraltar. I met him when he came from breakfast, and I always visited him when he returned from lunch. He became indignant, but I was unrelentingly persistent, and at last he gave me a bad debt, promising to settle my claim if I could collect his money."

"I was discouraged, but by a plan similar to the one I had long rehearsed, I made myself so annoying that to be rid of me the man somehow got the money and paid me. I enjoyed a good dinner myself that day and since then have never wanted any necessity. That, my Meg, was not the kind of story you were expecting, was it?"

Margaret did not answer, for the maid announced a visitor and she passed into the drawing room, where young Mr. Philip Warren was waiting. Jason Johnson rose and went to a bookcase and examined several old volumes. He dusted them carefully and replaced them tenderly—they were the first he had ever been able to purchase, and to him they represented much.

"Jason," said his sister, "I suspect that there is something serious between our little girl and this Mr. Warren. Don't you think him a fine young man and worthy our approval? I won't say that any one is worthy of Margaret," she added jealously.

Mr. Johnson dusted another of his treasures, and there was some moisture in his eyes, as was only natural, maybe. "Yes, Della, I think you are correct in your suspicions. I have watched them occasionally, and I feel certain that Philip is interested, and I am afraid, oh, I mean, I believe he is a person to whom we could offer no objections except that he is very young."

Miss Della did not observe her brother suddenly color like a schoolgirl, as he carefully returned the book—upside down, however—to its place. He was very pale when he returned to his chair, but she left the library without observing that either.

Presently Margaret returned and stood facing him and looking greatly disturbed.

"What is it, Meggie? Are you—that is—it seems to me, he left rather early?"

"Yes, I sent him away. He asked me to marry him, and I am sorry he did. Somehow I never realized before how a man like him is dependent upon others, but tonight I thought if he were thrown on his own resources, as you were once, he would never surmount all obstacles. I am sure he is not strong enough. And while he was speaking, he appeared so like a boy, so very young."

"Oh, Meg," cried Jason Johnson. "Do you think me so very old?"

Margaret Bright was looking directly into his eyes, and I have often heard that there is magnetism in a glance. However that may be, I know he drew her to him and held her close to his hungry heart. And in that new and great happiness he found complete compensation for the many dreary, empty days that were past.—Cincinnati Post.

A Coat of Paint.

A judicious use of paint will transform many a seemingly hopeless article. A remarkably ugly lamp was made into a thing of beauty by three coats of orange enamel paint applied to the porcelain vase. The metal stand was treated to a coat of the black paint which comes for bent iron-work, and the whole was completed by a shade of orange crepe paper. For such work one should get the English enamel paints, which come in a great variety of colors and give a surface as smooth as glass.

When a Man's Old.

When a man becomes old and his eyes fall him to that extent that he can no longer see the grease spots on his clothes, they also become invisible to the members of his household. No one brushes an old man's clothes or takes pride in his personal appearance. It is disagreeable to grow old, no matter what your sex. But it is worse if you are a man.—Aschleben Globe.
