II.

NATIVE POPULATION.

A-Disease. -The first disease introduced was syphilis, whose ravages cannot be expressed in figures, but are known to have been appelling; it has also thoroughly debilitated the whole race. The historian Jarvis mentions its recrudescence and virulence particularly on females, about 1842; but nowadays, especially since the last law "to mitigate," it has lost much of its former prevalence and deadliness. Measles and Hooping-cough were introduced in 1848, and are commonly acknowledged to have carried off one tenth of the population, making the rate of decrease of that period jump correctly from 16 to 24 per cent. Next came small pox, in 1853, which killed about 3,000 people, and caused the rate of decrease to rush up again to 12 per cent. Then followed seven years of normal conditions in which the rate went down to about 6 per cent. only. Proper quarantine precautions in the future, ought easily to preserve the race from any further calemities of this nature, if the men in the Government are earnest in their professed desire to protect the natives.

Lepresy, first observed in 1853, aroused public attention in 1864, and at the end of 1865 the Settlement at Molokai was started with 140 persons. Since then, up to July 31st, 1893, 4,782 persons have been sent there. These are supposed to include about 150 white Foreigners, but no record has been kept of the nationalities; many are Chinese. 1168 lepers were living at Molokai, July 31 1893, and according to the Government assertions, they are pretty near all the cases now existing, segregation being enforced with extreme severity, even at the cost of the Kalalau tragedy, in which one native, Koolau, successfully kept at bay a whole company of foreign soldiers, with artillery. (June 1893).

Yet the above total cannot be said to represent exactly all the cases that have developed in this country many having died at home, who had not come to the cognisance of the authorities, and others, principally foreigners, having left the country. The spread of this dire disease is popularly attributed in a great measure, to careless vaccination, (i) and there is really no other way that can account for the number of children, native and white, who have developed leprosy without their parents, nurses or attendants, having shown any symptoms of the scourge. To leprosy must evidently be attributed a certain proportion of the native decrease since 1853; but there is no plausible reason to suppose that its future effects may possibly increase the past or present rate of mortality, as it seems pretty nearly stamped out.

No additional light can be gathered, on the respective influence of the various other diseases as factors of mortality, by referring to the returns of the Board of Health, because these, outside of Honolulu, are merely nominal; and even in the Capital, the number of cases recorded as "unattended" or "cause unknown,"—and the true causes of which are thereby not scientifically ascertained,—is so large that any percentage table would be vitiated and useless. It can only be mentioned that consumption and lung diseases are large factors, and this can be asserted as a direct result of the sudden revolution in clothing enforced by the Missionaries.

As a visitor justly remarked: "the natives both males and females, very soon learned to add the necessities of fashion to the requirements of decency as taught by the New-England puritans, and from the early times when the money brought in by the whalers circulated freely in the country, the natives used to spend all their earnings on rich dresses, to out do their neighbors in the then important event of going to church. From the light national costume, suited to the climate, they jumped to heavy silk dresses, heavy woollen clothes, shoes and stockings, beaver hats, etc. which, in the heat of the day and in crowded meetings, made them perspire freely and feel so uncomfortable that, as soon as they could return home, they would strip naked and seek relief in the cold winds or thorough drafts, or throw themselves into the cold waters, thus bringing on themselves every kind of lung and rheumatic troubles. But the Natives were evidently encouraged in this love of dress by the missionaries, in view of increasing the profits of the drygoods stores owned by them.'

But it must now be borne in mind that the general sanitary conditions of the Natives,—even though they might still be bettered, to the advantage of the longevity of the race,—have yet wonderfully improved during the last decade, especially among the Half-castes, whose modes of living are getting to be more enlightened, cautious and refined, and quite equal to those of the best foreigners.

B. Disproportion of sexes.—The other causes enumerated were only very secondary, and their influence is waning, except that of the disproportion of sexes among the Natives. The last census registered 18,364 males against 16,072 females, out of the total of 34,436. By referring to the figures of the previous censuses, the following table has been compiled:

Excess of Males over Fenales, per cent:

1850. 1853. 1860. 1866. 1872. 1878. 1884. 1890. 4.39(*) 4.42 5.48 5.90 6.50 6.56 7.48 6.66

It will be noticed that, except for the dip in the last census, this disproportion of sexes has steadily increased within the last 40 years, no data existing for the previous periods. Stranger yet is it to note that the same thing happens among the white Foreigners born in the Islands, though among them, the excess of males is in a trifling smaller proportion, 4.32 per cent. Now, what is more, if we take all the races tog-ther, in the portion under 15 years only, given by the census, then the excess of males gets to be really 8.84 per cent., a fact from which we can conclude that the said disproportion is not ready to disappear, but will continue in increasing rate for the future, and this would lead us to suppose a general climatic cause, rather more than any racial one. Whatever it may be, the fact is here, and makes the exception of the half-castes, (the hope of our future) all the more valuable, this class being the only one in which the sexes are about equally divided, with even a regular slight excess in favor of the femiles. In what concerns the Natives separately, it must be admitted as very striking that, after making due allowance for all extraordinary causes, diseases and emigration, the ordinary rate of decrease among them follows very closely their ratio of excess of males, thus proving that this same disproportion of sexes has been no unimportant factor in the past decline of the race. Furthermore, the influence of this factor is aggravated by every marriage of Hawaiian women to Foreigners. Thus, the last Census reports about 600 of such marriages. This means 5 per cent of the number of marriageable Hawaiian women. "By such marriages, says the Census Report, foreigners have been supplied with wives from a race who has no women to spare, to the detriment of the males of that same race." The only remedy to this would seem to be an importation of women, such as I advocated as far back as 1886, and which had been seriously contemplated by the late King Kalakana. 2,292 women would be necessary to balance the Hawaiian males, and 423 for the Hawaiian-born Foreigners.

(*) That this is a sure fact, to the common popular opinion, denied only by the vaccinating physicians and the missionaries who helped them, who were naturally with to third the away associables.

The next factor, intimately connected with the above, is the proportionate fewness of births and large mortality of infants among our remnants of full Hawaiians, in other words the tendency among many of their females to barrenness and carelessness in rearing. These circumstances were already recorded by Jarvis, and confirmed in 1860, when superintendant Fuller of the Census, noticed that the decrease of the native population was "not owing to any unusual great degree of mortality among the people, but to the pancity of births." This is probably due to the debauchery, licentiousness, promiseuous living and prostitution at all times prevalent among the people, and only natural and to be expected in a population, in whom moral ideas were formerly so very different, and in whom at the present time, not only the male aborigines are in excess, but no less than 26,000 single men of other nationalities, mere laborers, have been introduced, as a consequence of the Reciprocity Treaty, to pander to the rapacity of the white setttlers; and all this without taking into account the passing crews of numerous ships.

And here, it must be said, that there is a most erroneous estimate in the last Census, about the number of Native women married, and the proportion of children they are supposed to bear. Out of 11,135 native women of age, 7,556 (76.69 per cent.) are reported as married. Of these, 6.049 (not quite 6 sevenths) are reported to have borne children. thus giving a rate of 4.7 offsprings for each mother, 54.07 per cent, of these surviving. If this was correct, it would leave nearly 3 surviving children to each mother, and consequently ought to keep the population nearly stationary, instead of allowing the present decrease of 13 per cent. But we must remember that, owing to the loose habits of the land, out of the remaining 32.34 per cent. of unmarried women, four fifths live in concubinage; this proportion may even be larger, because girls of the common people, especially in the towns and sugar-districts with large laboring classes of aliens, frequently begin that kind of life at fourteen or even earlier, and are soon rendered barren. That this state of things is not revealed by the Census, is not extraordinary, for two reasons: Ist, that children of unmarried women are generally recorded as belonging to some married sister or relation; 2nd, that it is also covered by the fashion, at all times prevalent among the Hawaiians, to adopt, and call theirs, children of their friends and relatives. It is therefore quite safe to say that the census ratio of children to each married full native woman is absolutely misleading. It would be much more correct to consider 90 or 95 per cent. of all the women of physiological age as actually married, and, by dividing among them the number of children actually born and surviving, it would give for the average fertility of the present Hawaiian mother, only 2 to 3 children, less than half of whom survive, a proportion more in accord with the rate of decrease of population.

This cause of decrease might perhaps be greatly reduced by rational, practical laws on prostitution,-instead of the absurd legislation due to missionary prudishness,-and by legislative encouragements to large families. -Such a supposition is corroborated by the fact that large families are not yet rare among the full Natives who lead purer lives. A few examples will illustrate the assertion, all of which relate to families whose parents are full natives on both sides. In Puna one full native, Lono, boasts of 49 living descendants in two generations, a fact commemorated in the name of the last-born, Kahananui, "the big family;" Kailihiwa has 33 living descendants, Kahiki 25, Bila, (a native from Rarotonga married to a pure native) has 27 living; in Hilo, Kaelemakule, through two daughters, has now 29 descendants living, Kealoha has 9 children and 11 grand-children, all young and healthy. In Kauai, a young native lady, Mrs. L. Opeka, with a full native husband, has already had 16 children, 15 of whom are living. Twins are also no uncommon occurence among the Natives. All this is further confirmed by the assertion of leading Natives, that, in the most remote, inaccessible districts, principally in Kona and Puna of Hawaii, Kalalan of Kauai, etc .where the foreign white or Asiatic residents or laborers are nearly absent or reduced to a minimum,-the number of young native children is quite noticeable and evidently on the increase; in other words, where the lewd influence of white and Assatic elements is less felt, the native women are more prolific and keep the population up, a fact full of meaning for a race reported as fatally dying out. This is practically confirmed by the Census, which notes that in South Kona, the total decrease of Natives in 6 years has only been of 13 individuals, or 0.8 per cent !!

It is only justice, moreover, to note that the morality and chastity of the Hawaiian female has vastly improved in the last few years, which bodes good results for the future.

C.—Emigration.—Now comes the most obscure factor of Hawaiian decrease, about which one can proceed only by conjectures, as all available official statistics fail to throw the faintest light on it, and no documents are known to exist, by which the number of aborigines could be ascertained, who did leave the country at any time, whether to return or not. Even of late, with our "improved" passport system, no separate record has been kept of Hawaiian travellers or emigrants, and no official document can show at any time how many native sailors are shipped on the foreign trade recents.
