HAWAIIAN GAZETTE

Spiritual and Temporal.

Mr. Disraeli was not the first to announce the beginning of a contest in Europe...

Mr. Disraeli allows that "these things may be far off, but we live in a rapid age, and my apprehension is that they are nearer than some suppose."

When two such eminent authorities, one in political and the other in ecclesiastical circles, so nearly concur, it is none too early to inquire concerning the nature of the impending conflict...

If we could accept without qualification Archbishop Manning's version of the issue, it might be very succinctly stated. The Church is the victim of oppression by the temporal power, and is simply struggling for its liberty.

To the like effect was the language of the Pope to a deputation of pupils from German and North American colleges—"In Germany liberty (meaning religious liberty) is oppressed, but in your country (America) it is complete and almost excessive, or at least very dangerous."

The Archbishop undertakes to establish the theory thus propounded by denunciation of what are spoken of as the Falk laws of Germany, by which, according to his account of them, it is decreed that "the ecclesiastical disciplinary power shall only be exercised by German ecclesiastical authorities," and an appeal to the State is allowed against any such exercise of power.

By a non-German power, or, in other words, by the Roman pontiff? The Archbishop considers that "the unity of the Church and the connection of its members with their Supreme Head being severed by this violent substitution of a royal court for the disciplinary authority of the Pope, it is almost superfluous to look for minor and subordinate encroachments on the Church's rights. As a fact, however," the Archbishop continues, "the persecution is carried out to the minutest details."

Thus, "in order to pervert the minds of the youthful aspirants to the priesthood, it is provided that they shall spend three years in theological studies in a German university," and before entering upon the administration of a spiritual office must pass a satisfactory State examination in history, philosophy and the sciences.

Neither must they belong to an ecclesiastical seminary during the prescribed university study, notwithstanding that "all ecclesiastical institutions which serve for the education of the clergy are under the inspection of the State, and are subject to revision by commissioners named by the Ober President."

Not to go further into these details, let us conclude them with the Archbishop's own language: "In a word, compulsory un-Catholic education for the priesthood, the authority of Ober-Präsident substituted for that of the Bishops, and the authority of a 'Royal Tribunal for Ecclesiastical Affairs' substituted for that of the Pope—such are the sum and purport of the Falk Decrees."

The Pope's recent letter to the German Emperor made the inflictment still more direct and sweeping. "All the various measures taken by your Majesty's government of late," wrote the Pontiff, "are more or less intended to destroy Catholicism."

The correspondence quoted from being yet fresh, it will be remembered that the Emperor's reply embraced a charge that the Roman Catholic clergy in Germany had, within the last two years, "organized a political party, bent upon disturbing by revolutionary intrigues the good relations which have so happily existed between the various denominations in Prussia for centuries," supporting it "even to open rebellion against the existing laws of the country."

To this charge it was added that the ecclesiastical party had, in carrying on their agitation, "lamentably distorted the truth, and abused the authority of the priestly office," and the Emperor asserted: "Before God I solemnly declare that the religion of Christ has nothing in common with these intrigues, and that there is no connection between the present agitation and that truth which your Holiness appeals to, and which I most unreservedly confess."

On this side of the Atlantic the Emperor William is credited with being, what he professes himself to be, a believer in Christianity, if not a practical Christian; and the issue thus joined between Pope and Kaiser, Church and State, standing out though it does above any other of the kind visible here, therefore does not satisfy fully the hints of Mr. Disraeli as to the nature of the predicted jolinder of battle. He in one place opposes the contestants under the names of "faith and free thought;" and in another embodies them figuratively as "the withering blast of atheism" and "the simoom of sacerdotal usurpation."

Even if we understand the latter phrase as actually meant to describe one of the parties to the German controversy, we cannot possibly apply the other to the Protestant Emperor and his Protestant and Old Catholic subjects. It is therefore hard to realize that the current collision between the pretensions of Church and State in Germany, Austria and Italy—and, by the way, a portion of the American continent, Brazil, may be added—even the commencement of the Official Politeness.

Politeness adorns the character of any man. It costs nothing to practice it, and yet, free as it is, many persons refuse to possess it.

It should be the pleasure of every one to treat with common courtesy those who have personal or business relations with them. It should be exacted from our public officials, as one of the duties of official life.

A rude official should be driven from office. Insulting language to a well-behaved stranger who has business with an official, should be good grounds for declaring the office vacant. It is a decided pleasure to do business with a polite official.

Successful or otherwise in what you desired, you leave the office with a good opinion of the man. But to enter the presence of some public officers is like entering the den of some wild animal; you are on the guard continually, and fear that the harsh words and gathering frowns may be followed by an official order to tear you to pieces.

You get out as soon as possible, and nothing but necessity can induce you to return. If you have collected an honest claim, you have been made to feel that you have plundered the Treasury; if you have protested against some official act, or submitted objections to certain decisions, you are in doubt whether you have performed the duty of an American citizen or encroached upon the rights of some august monarch.

Public officials should understand that they are the servants of the people. Every taxpayer helps pay their salaries, and they have the right to polite treatment at all times.

Too many officers forget the appointing power. They act as if they were in for life, and owed every thing under them, and had the right to crack the whip over their subordinates and over the heads of all who come in contact with them.

This practice should be stopped; the people should demand courtesy from their servants, and if they fail to receive it, should drive the offenders from office and put men in who can practice the common civilities of life.—Am. paper.

Malay Customs.

I was told, writes a traveler in Borneo, that it is indispensably necessary that a young man should procure a skull before he gets married.

On my urging that the custom would be more honored in the breach than in the observance, they replied that it was established from time immemorial, and could not be dispensed with.

Subsequently, however, it was allowed that heads were very difficult to obtain now, and a young man might sometimes get married by giving presents to his lady-love's parents.

At all times they denied warmly ever obtaining any heads but their enemies, adding that they were bad people, and deserved to die.

I asked a young man whether he would be obliged to get a head before he could obtain a wife. He replied "Yes."

"When would he get one?" "Soon."

"Where would he go to get one?" "To the Sarebus river."

I mention these particulars in detail, as I think, had their practice extended to taking the head of any defenseless traveler, or any Malay surprised in his dwelling or boat, I should have got the secret out of him.

The men marry but one wife, and that not until they have attained the age of 17 or 18. Their wedding ceremony is curious, and is performed by the bride and bridegroom being brought in procession along the large room, where a brace of fowls is placed over the bridegroom's neck, which whirrs seven times round his head.

The fowls are then killed, and their blood sprinkled on the forehead of the pair, which done, they are cooked and eaten by the new married couple alone, whilst the rest feast and drink during the whole night.

The manner in which the gentle duck is beguiled by amateur hunters is enough to fill that much-wanted hipod with disgust at the remorseless greed of man.

A Minnesota youth, finding the ducks on Rice Lake too wary to wait until they were shot, determined to resort to other means to obtain enough for the family Sunday dinner.

He selected a pumpkin, cut a hole in it, removed the interior, and carried it to the shore of the Lake, where, divesting himself of his clothing and placing the pumpkin over his head, he waded in among the rice where the ducks were feeding.

In a short time the chief duck approached to reconnoitre, and seeing nothing more formidable than a juicy and toothsome pumpkin he signalled his companions, and they advanced in order to feast upon the fortunate windfall.

While on their way towards the banquet they were surprised by seeing the chief duck suddenly dive under the water, feet foremost, and failing to come up.

Another duck took upon itself the office of scout in order to investigate the cause of this strange proceeding, and in turn made a back summersault, with surprising rapidity.

Duck number three, who followed, went down tail-feathers first with a scream and a despairing fluttering of its pinions, and also neglected to come back and tell what the matter was.

The remainder of the herceved flock took to flight with terror depicted on their countenances, and doubtless, with a firm conviction that there was a mystery connected with pumpkins that no duck can find out. That Minnesota youth had his Sunday dinner, but he got it in a very un-sportsmanlike manner.

Baker's Nile Geography.

The following paragraphs from one of Sir Samuel Baker's recent letters give his views of Nile geography.

The opinion that Lakes Tanganyika and Albert N'yanza are one is regarded by geographers in England as inconsistent with Livingstone's discoveries.

"Albert N'yanza—Congratulate Mr. Findlay from me. His theory is correct. This lake is a simple continuation of the Tanganyika."

"I had frequent conversations with two native merchants of Karigwe, who purchased ivory for their King, Rumanika."

"They were had on several occasions arrived from Karigwe by boat via the M'wootan N'zige (Albert N'yanza). They describe the Lake as very wide in some portions, but varying in an irregular manner. In some places it narrows suddenly, and then again enlarges to a sudden width."

"For a return voyage from Masindi, N. lat. 1.45, to Karigwe by lake, the merchants' route is as follows:

"Masindi, two days' march west to Chibero, on the Albert N'yanza. From Chibero by boat you pass in succession to the south—Minyoro (Speke's Unyoro), Kabbayo, Tambooki, M'Pororo, boat stops, and in two days' overland march east you reach Karigwe, about 3 degrees south latitude, Raanda, Barooni (Speke's Urundi?), Chibogora, Watuta, Machoonda."

"Ujiji is well known to be on the M'wootan N'zige—i. e., the Albert N'yanza."

"Beyond Machoondi the merchants know nothing except that the lake extends to the south for an unknown distance."

"This information agrees with that formerly given me by Kamrasi—that the Albert N'yanza extended as far as Karigwe, and continued for an unknown distance from that point."

"There can be little doubt that Livingstone has discovered the most remote sources of the Nile in the affluents of the small Lake Lemba, which feed the Tanganyika."

"Nevertheless, there is an enormous volume brought down by Speke's Victoria source. If lakes cannot be accepted as actual sources, the fact is plainly established that the Victoria and Albert are the two great reservoirs of the Nile."

"The White Nile issuing from the Albert N'yanza is now well known to be navigable as far as north lat. 3 deg. 32 min. the point at which the river falls suddenly in a succession of cataracts. I am now arranging a station above the falls at that spot, to which I trust the steamers will be conveyed."

"The importance of steam navigation is immense, as the entire trade of the Tanganyika will be added to that of the Albert N'yanza, now known to be one vast sheet of water."

"This inland sea will be in the hands of Egypt when the steamers will be launched from Ibrahimieh, N. lat. 3 deg. 32 min."

AMERICAN POSTAGE STAMPS.

The following paragraph, floating about through the papers, will be of interest to those persons who have been perplexed to know what heroes ornamented the various descriptions of postage stamps:

"The portrait of Benjamin Franklin on the one-cent stamp, an imperial ultramarine blue, is after a profile bust of Rahrheit. The head of Andrew Jackson on the two-cent stamp, in velvet brown, is from a bust by Hiram Powers. The Washington head on the green three-cent stamp, is after Houdon's celebrated bust. The Lincoln profile in red, on the six-cent stamp, is a bust by Volk. The seven-cent stamp, in vermilion, gives the head of Stanton, after a photograph. The head of Jefferson on the ten-cent stamp, in chocolate, is drawn from a life-size statue by Hiram Powers. The portrait of Henry Clay, in neutral purple, on the twelve-cent stamp, is after a bust of Hart. The head of Webster on the fifteen-cent stamp, in orange, is after the Cleveing bust. The portrait of General Scott on the twenty-five-cent stamp, in purple, is after a bust by Caffie. The head of Hamilton on the thirty-cent stamp, in black, is after the Cerrachi bust, and the portrait of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, in carmine, is after Wolcott's statue. The style in which these adhesive stamps are printed, and the clearness of outline of the several portraits, as well as the artistic excellence of the engraving, reflect credit on the head of the Post-Office Department, Mr. Cresswell, under whose authority they were executed."
