THE EXTRADITION CASE.

The report of the final proceedings in the McCarthy extradition case occupies a large portion of our available space to-day.

"It went against me, as I anticipated it would, and I must return with my friend, Officer Bee."

It is not our purpose to discuss the merits or demerits of McCarthy's case.

mand the ablest legal assistance while the Courts of the State are open to him.

At the same time, while the moral effect of this decision may, and doubtless will prove eminently wholesome...

As we have said, however, the law has been made clear by the finding and opinion of the Court in McCarthy's case.

A PIG IN A POKE.

An Inexperienced Young Porker Gets in a Tight Place. (Virginia Chronicle).

Early on Tuesday morning a young porker weighing about ninety pounds, in quest of something to eat, followed his owner into an open space between the old Boston house and an adjoining dwelling on South B street.

The hungry pig went for the swill barrel—something really good for the swill barrel—something really good for the swill barrel—something really good for the swill barrel.

All the people living in that block were on hand, each and every one, to witness the execution. Several of them were tried without in any degree tending to unconspicuous the pig.

There was quite a disturbance on Nuuanu street yesterday morning about 8 o'clock between some native boys and a pig.

Early Wednesday morning the efforts to rescue the prisoner were renewed. He was growing weaker and weaker, and must be put to rest before death ensued.

Two large property owners were sent for the employment of a carpenter to cut a hole through one of the buildings opposite the porker.

The lady started, her cheeks flushed, the pantaloons dropped from her grasp, and she bright idea entered her head. Recovering her composure she said:
