NEWS IN REVIEW

While the ranting and raving over the collapse of the summit and the related U-2 incident kept most of the upper strata busy this last week, other people in other places were busy as follows:

Queen Mother Elizabeth, 59, was busy denying that she, a widow of eight years, would marry Sir Arthur Penn, her household treasurer, who is 74.

Many were busy speculating on whether or not Russia's latest satellite had a human being in it. Some experts said YES. Some experts said NO. If there is a man in it, HE is busy wondering when and if he's going to get back to his vodka and bortsch. Latest news is that the satellite had goofed and slipped into a new orbit, was going away from instead of towards Mother Earth.

Radcliffe College was busy continuing its infiltration of Harvard University and its girls were busy infiltrating the hearts of Harvard men. The Class of '49 reported that 42% of its husbands were Harvard men.

South Africa's Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd was again busy pushing apartheid after five weeks of recuperating from bullet wounds inflicted by a busy assassin.

Hong Kong is busiest of all. Travel agents are advising that would-be Hong Kong visitors book six months ahead if they want hotel rooms. All 760 rooms of the five first-class hotels have long waiting lists.

In Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, police busily arrested Vendor Iyle Smith for selling beer from his Good Humor truck. Even busier, the judges of a "Miss Uganda" contest unhappily heard the news that one of the contestants had a miscarriage.

LIFT THE MUDDY CUP 3 OR 5-STAR STYLE

This week's cover depicting the kava stone leads one's imagination to wonder about the beverage which is so ceremoniously prepared at Ponape. The Ponape-per, already in the class with Time Magazine in respect to Miscellany, now in my opinion takes on the class of The New Yorker with its slick advertisements. If one thumbs through the magazine, it soon becomes apparent that the best of spirits are advertised on its pages. Where the production is of high quality, such designators are used as 3-Star, 5-Star, Pinch, etc.

Now as the Ponape-per has approached a par with the magazines already mentioned and being proudly parochial in advertising its famous beverage, I do with some authority state that the kava on our front page is definitely piper mythisticum 3-Star. This is recommended to people who are interested in a good beverage.

However, for the true gourmet and for those very rare occasions, I recommend our readers ask the local pounders for a coconut cupful of piper mythisticum 5-Star. -W.E.F.

This Week: Wilfredo C. Doctor

"My father was a farmer, and I helped him all during the war; but I made up my mind that I would work in something besides farming when the war ended." Our Assistant District Supply Officer, in supply work for the last thirteen years, has carried out his intention. Behind his words, however, lies a story typical of many in the Philippines from 1941 to 1945 - one that would understandably influence Fred in desiring a change. Soon after the invasion, the Doctor family had to leave their town home in Pangasinan, Central Zone (north of Manila), to concentrate on agricultural work at their ranch in the jungle country some miles away. Though saddened at leaving their home, the family felt fortunate in having enough to eat during the war years.

Fred was a sophomore in high school when the first manifestations of war became dreadfully apparent. He and his classmates witnessed a "dog fight" in the sky directly above them and, as the sound of bursting shells reached their ears, each knew that henceforth his life would be drastically affected.

Although he could have attended a nearby Japanese school, Fred felt that his father's need of his help with the ranch work was more important, for he was the only son in the family. The knowledge of English that he had gained in school served him well in becoming an interpreter for an American pilot who had been shot down and was hiding in the jungle surrounding the farm.

At the war's conclusion Fred returned to his home and to school, moving to Manila for his junior and senior years. He played soccer, football, and basketball for his high school teams. Born in 1928, he was nineteen when he received his diploma, and two months later he was accepted for his first position.

July 1947, saw Fred's arrival in Guam as an employee in the commissary warehouse belonging to Brown-Pacific-Maxon, a construction concern. A year later he had his first glimpse of Ponape when he was sent here to serve as storekeeper for nine weeks. At that time B.P.M. was under contract with the Navy for the construction of the hospital, dock and intermediate school buildings.

Soon after Fred returned to Guam B.P.M. dissolved, and its activities were assumed by the Hawaiian Dredging Company. Under a sub-contract for camp and commissary operations was the B. F. Brown Company, which hired Fred. Here he received experience in accounting and payroll work, camp supervision, and housing administration on top of his regular supply operations.

Fred joined the Trust Territory family in February of 1957, performing stock control and procurement work in Guam until June of the following year, when he left for Ponape.

Last summer Fred took his first trip in twelve years, explaining, "It always seemed too much trouble to pack and make travel arrangements". He toured Hong Kong and Japan before joining his family in Manila. At the airport he hardly recognized his younger sister, now married and the mother of a son, whom he had not seen since she was seventeen. As well as visiting with his parents and sister, Fred took advantage of his stay to travel extensively throughout the Philippines. True of so many people, he had seen much of the rest of the world without having travelled through his home country.

Fred enjoyed that trip so much that he will "make up for lost leaves" by going home again this summer. He plans to leave soon, will follow approximately the same itinerary as last year. After his trip he will return to Ponape to resume his duties at the Supply Department and favorite pastimes of reading and listening to music. His many friends here wish him a fine trip, but local femmes especially will be glad to welcome him back not only as a friend but as an accomplished dancing partner at our social functions.
