FALLING A MILE.

Dropping Like a Stone from the Clouds to the Earth.
A Startling Adventure in a Tisandier and Gower's Trip from Auteuil—Timely Precaution.

[Paris News.]
Very recently a startling experience of Messrs Gaston Tisandier and Frederick Gower, husband and wife, the American prima donna, showed that the practical dangers of ballooning are still far from being surmounted however well actual dangers may be averted by the skill of the balloonist. These two gentlemen ascended from the Tisandier establishment at Auteuil about 1 o'clock, to continue a series of scientific experiments upon certain theories advanced by M. Gower. They sailed slowly across Paris to the southeast at a height of about 1,500 feet, and disappeared in the direction of Vincennes. In answer to the inquiry of a Morning News representative M. Gower relates what befell the voyage afterward. "We were at a height of 6,000 feet above the village of Fontenay. A fete was going on there, and the faint echo of drums, mingled with the cries of children and the barking of dogs, just reached our ears amid all the awful silence of the heavens. We were among the clouds of the lower stratum, and had before our eyes the magnificent spectacle of their formation. The forces of nature moved them to and fro in a kind of sudden majesty, now filling them into a mountain just above our heads, and then, as the mass toppled to its fall, dispersing it suddenly, as by a blow from the hammer of some invisible Titan, making rifts through which we saw the fair green lands, and then quickly closing them, as the vaporous monsters rolled into fresh combinations. It was the inner temple of creative power, perhaps the grandest sight revealed to human eyes, and we stood entranced in silent admiration. "Suddenly we felt a breath of cold and biting air, as though the world had revolved beneath us and brought us to the pole. At the same moment, the needle upon a vertical scale (from which I had been reading indications of level) began to travel with a rattling speed, and the sound like the roar of surf filled our ears for an instant, and then gave place to the noise of the fete, which had now swelled into a cry, as it seemed, from every living thing below. Tisandier threw out sand, and the sand flew up in our faces. Our breath came short and hard, and we felt the rushing air as on a steamer against the wind. We were falling suddenly, as though the great globe above our heads had given way! Yet nothing visible had happened, save that the under surface of the envelope had all at once grown hollow and wrinkled, like the face of an aged man. The clouds were gone, as by magic, and the earth was rushing at us, with its thousand voices in full cry. Tisandier stood cool and firm, dealing out ballast with steady hand and counting the bags that remained. "Stand by the anchor," he said, quietly, as if at his study-table, "and be ready to cut away when I tell you." "Down we went, the drag-rope touched the earth—trailed across the fields, with scarcely perceptible difference in our fall. The ground seemed alive with men hurrying from every side, with here and there a horseman among them. A meadow was just beneath, and a quick glance beyond showed the edge of a forest. The balloon trembled as from a blow, and our speed across the field was suddenly doubled. We had fallen into a squall. "Cut away," said the steady voice of the aeronaut, and the anchor fell. Over went a bag of ballast, and this suddenly lightened by thirty pounds the balloon regained its poise at fifty feet above the ground, and our fall of a mile through the air was safely ended. "Never was so much accepted more quickly followed by practical illustration. Less than an hour before Tisandier had been dwelling upon the need of reserving ballast as a precaution. There are in the air, he said, occasional rarefactions into which a balloon can fall without the slightest warning. When you are near the ground it does not much matter. But no prudent aeronaut, at a height of 1,000 metres or more, will allow his ballast to become even nearly exhausted. "This was precisely what our own case showed so abundantly afterward. We encountered a partial vacuum, a veritable pit in the air, where the lifting-power of gas suddenly fell to almost nothing. Air was, of course, on the way from some area of a greater density to restore the normal pressure, and of this we had ample evidence upon reaching the ground. The anchor struck the soft earth in the most favorable position, buried half its flukes in the soil, and was snatched out with scarcely an effort by the flying car. Again and again the heavy iron bounded fifty feet into the air, and it was only when a score of stout laborers had in the hold of the drag-rope (at cost of a few tumbles) that the gambols of our playful monster were brought to an end. And then Tisandier, with his obliging hands folded and packed the balloon, produced a note-book and his map, and calmly completed his record of the excursion. "A Curious Experiment. [San Francisco Chronicle.] A physician in this city, whose imagination had been excited by the recent use of the tuning-fork by German practitioners in cases of neuralgia, has been experimenting with that instrument on the ears of persons congenitally deaf, and finds that the vibrations are evidently appreciated by the rudimentary auditory nerve of the deaf-mute almost as acutely as why the perfect ear.

"Me dear boy, do you know I've got a beauty cold?"
"How did you catch it, old fellow?"
"Last evening I drank a glass of wine, don't you know, and I sat too near the watch when he opened the bottle, don't you know. The draft caused by the cork flying through the air was too much for me, you know."

THE PLANTERS' MONTHLY.

The January number of this useful periodical, being the tenth of the third volume, is before us. It maintains the standard of its predecessors, which has always been a highly creditable one. Literary enterprises of the class to which this magazine belongs are apt to flag if not to fail when the enthusiasm under whose influence they are first inaugurated has had time to subside.

Two papers in the present number attract our attention as of high importance to the public generally. These are Mr. Jaeger's on "Neglected Industries" and a circular letter on the subject of "Portuguese Co-operative Labor," issued by the Trustees of the P. L. & S. Co. to the planters of the Kingdom.

The letter about "Portuguese Co-operative Labor" embodies an idea brought forth by the members of the Planters' Labor and Supply Company when they were last in session by Senhor Canavaro, the Portuguese Commissioner. The planters to whom the circular is addressed are asked to give consideration to a letter which Senhor Canavaro has addressed to the President of the Company.

There are many other papers of much interest in connection with the special industry to which the "Monthly" is devoted. Among these we may mention Mr. Alex. Young's on the "Waikaka Maceration Machinery," Mr. Lydgate's "Maceration Experience at Laupahoehoe," and Mr. Fritze's on "Diffusion."

An Instructive Paper.

[From the Planters' Monthly for January, 1885, we re-produce the following interesting article from the pen of Mr. A. Jaeger, whose experience in the matters of which he treats give great value to his article.]

NEGLECTED INDUSTRIES.

Believing it to be of almost incalculable benefit to this country if more attention were paid to many new or heretofore neglected plants of utilitarian value, I have in various ways tried to create that interest among the lords of the soil which the subject deserves, but have so far failed.

Those few planters and land-owners who are not entirely indifferent about this question, are more timid about taking any steps in the matter than they need be, although such cultures cannot be begun without some outlay. It can be managed in such a way that the expenditure would be insignificant in comparison to the benefits to be derived therefrom.

Many objections are being raised against my argument of having a person employed to specially attend to these experiments, mainly on account of the expense, and also of the difficulty in finding suitable men.

It occurs to me that there is a way to overcome these drawbacks. There are now many boys on the various plantations, say from 14 to 18 years of age. Pick out those apparently most suited, send them to the Government nursery, and let them do practical work under the gardener for three months. As these boys would be only too glad to avail themselves of such a chance, there is no doubt that advantageous terms could be made with them or their parents.

Even if at present this nursery does not offer such facilities for learning as might be wished for, yet these boys could learn enough during the time to become very useful if they should take to this kind of work at all.

They could learn how to treat the various kinds of seeds in order to make them germinate, and take care of the seedlings; they could learn how to water and shelter them properly. They could get a knowledge of the various ways of propagating, of the manner in which the different kinds of plants should be transplanted, their proper supporting, trimming and keeping them as far as possible from blight, in fact many more useful things which do not now occur to me.

In coming to the cost of such an enterprise, I have based my calculations on twenty boys being taught during the year, five for every three months, as follows:

Table with 2 columns: Item, Cost. Building, say $200.00; Five beds, furniture, extra tools, say $150.00; Board five boys one year, 50 cents per day, $912.50; Remuneration for gardener, $300.00; Total $1562.50.

The gardener and his wife have expressed themselves satisfied with the above proposed terms, and the cost for each would, therefore, be about $80; adding thereto passage to and fro, washing, literature, and other minor expenses, the total ought not to exceed $100.

These boys would have to work in the nursery during the day, and occasionally for a day at Makiki, in order to learn something about tree-planting on the mountains; evenings to be spent in reading and studying, liberty on Sundays until midnight.

The next question which arises is, how can those desirous of planting obtain the necessary seeds or plants? My advice is, that whenever the nature of the plants wished for permits it, try to procure good seeds in preference to plants, the expense will be much less, and the results better, especially when the seed can be sown at or near the lands where the plants are to be set out.

It must, however, be understood that the seeds of many of the most valuable tropical plants keep their germinating power but for a very short time, some even for a few days only, which difficulty as to sending them for long distances may be overcome by packing them into damp earth. Other tropical seeds of less tender nature should always be of the last season's growth, and experience will prove that there are very few kinds which at a greater age will be worth the trouble of sowing.

I wish to show by the foregoing, that even if we were not particular as to cost, it is entirely a different thing from getting those seeds which this country is particularly in need of, and the getting our orders for lettuce and cucumber seeds filled.

The great thing in obtaining seeds of tropical economic plants is to watch the seasons and send the orders to those places where they are most likely to be gotten. But it does not follow that orders are always best sent to those countries where such plants may be indigenous. On the contrary, in many cases such seeds can be obtained at less cost, of better quality, and more promptly from other parts of the globe.

It must be obvious by what has been said before, that to keep seeds on hand in a tropical climate simply to be able to fill an order, at whatever season it may arrive, cannot be beneficial to individuals nor the country at large.

I do not want to discourage the persons who single-handed want to make trials in new cultures, but it seems to me that their efforts as made at present cannot lead to any great practical results.

What we want here is a combination, a number of interested persons to use their thoughts and a little of their means for the public good. The subject is sufficiently important for this, and returning to the question of obtaining seeds, I do not think that it would be very difficult to find, say two or three persons, who would serve as a committee in receiving orders for seeds.

A rule might be adopted to receive such orders at intervals, say during the months of February and August. Two months during the year are, in my opinion, sufficient for any one to make up his mind as to his wants, but these terms are simply proposed to make the work to the working committee as little irksome as possible.

At the end of the term named, these orders would be examined. Many, no doubt, would call for the same thing which would be embodied into one, and in a systematic way these orders would be sent to the various places abroad wherever, according to the opinion of the committee, they could be best obtained.

In order to protect this committee from loss, all orders should be accompanied by the necessary cash. There are few seeds that anybody being desirous of, could not afford to pay for, but it would be rather awkward, for instance, to receive from a party, who wants to go into Cinchona culture extensively, an order for a couple of pounds of the seeds (which is worth $100 per ounce) with the simple request, etc., please send bill.

There is a prevailing idea that the Government ought to attend to all this, and the remark is often made "If the Government only would supply us with this or that kind of plant in sufficient number, we would make plenty of money."

To be sure the Government has an embryo nursery, but it is entirely wrong to think that it was instituted to supply individual wants. No Government, possessed of ever so many botanical gardens, could or would comply with the demands which are almost daily made upon our poor little establishment.

It was instituted for the public good, and, for the present, the main and almost sole object, in my opinion, is to introduce as many varieties of new economic plants as possible, and to prove what can successfully be grown in the country.

The attention of the man at the nursery is also directed towards raising trees for the squares and other public grounds, and whenever there is a surplus of the trees suitable for the mountains, they are sent there to be planted on public lands.

In order to acclimatize certain valuable plants they are occasionally distributed, sent to places most similar to their native home, and to the address of persons who are most likely to take care of them. The manner in which these distributions are made must, of course, be left to the discretion of the persons in charge.

It sometimes occurs that an abundance of certain plants, either useful or ornamental, is on hand, but no public lands being available which are suitable, they are given away to anybody who values them sufficiently to carry them off to plant, but in those instances it cannot be expected that the nursery should have the trouble and expense of packing, carting and shipping. Parties who, by reason of contributions made, have a claim upon the nursery, can call at any time upon the resources, and any returns within its power will be made.

The world over, nearly all establishments of this kind insist upon exchange or quid pro quo, the necessity of which must be apparent, because they would soon become stripped of their most valuable plants, if upon demand, everything was delivered up, and in many cases to parties who, beyond having the desire of possessing certain things, have not the remotest idea what to do with them.

It ought to be understood that such an institution can fulfill its mission only by keeping in view the public good, and not waste its energies and means by trying to satisfy individual and, in many cases, petty wants.

The above explanations have become necessary on account of the increasing applications for plants at the nursery. The gardener is so often interrupted in his labors that it seriously interferes with the work in hand.

The foregoing must also serve as an answer to numerous letters sent to me personally of late, which, I am sorry to say, I had not the time to answer; if it is still necessary to make an apology for this neglect, it is hereby humbly made.

These letters all contain orders for plants and seeds, and were, no doubt, addressed to me either on account of my connection with the Government nursery, or by my being a kind of an agricultural apostle. Many of these correspondents are clearly under the impression that whatever other cares I may have, I also have the one of collecting a heavy salary at the end of each month; I have to inform them that the work I am doing in this matter is being done for love of this country, and with no view for present or future direct benefit for me.

I am convinced that every island of this group could be transformed into a beautiful garden. However bad the land may be, a sand bank, a rocky hill, a dry plain or a sour swamp, useful plants can always be found which will thrive there.

These islands could not only be transformed into gardens, but a perfect paradise could be made of them, and it is to be hoped, as the inhabitants, and particularly the agriculturists, are gradually becoming more acquainted with the actual productive powers of this country, that they will not lack the energy necessary to make use of our soil and climate, which can hardly be equalled in the world.

The isolated position of these islands is also a reason which should help to prove the necessity of making united systematic efforts in this public cause. A number of people can accomplish a thing wherein a single individual may fail, or only partially succeed.

LOCAL AND GENERAL. The foreign jurors not drawn on the counterfeiting case have been excused until next Monday at 10 o'clock a. m.

The very full report given in this morning's Daily Advertiser has crowded out considerable amount of matter.

The Chief-Justice yesterday remarked that he knew of but one other case that had come up under the law against counterfeiting on these islands...

The exact and self-possessed manner in which one of the witnesses in the counterfeiting case answered the questions of council, yesterday, elicited a good deal of merriment.

SUPREME COURT—JANUARY TERM, 1885. Chief Justice Judd presiding. THURSDAY, January 8th, 1885.

The Court met at 10 o'clock and after a few moments delay the case of Wong Kau, charged with counterfeiting was called.

The following persons were called on the jury. C. J. McCarthy, E. Huddan, A. D. Bolster, Thos. May, M. C. Egles, W. Clark, M. O. Clifford, E. S. Cunha, E. G. Greary, J. W. Hingley, T. Lishman, and E. C. Hendry.

Mr. Russell objected to anyone serving as juror in this case who was directly or indirectly in the employ of the Government; whereupon Mr. Hendry stated that he had been assisting the Secretary of the Board of Health for the past few days, and being objected to on that account withdrew.

Mr. Max Eckart being sworn stated that he was a manufacturing jeweller, had been in the business 25 years. Upon being shown the moulds captured in the defendant's shop he stated that they contained the impression of the Kalakaua dollar. That such moulds were used for casting coin, medals, etc. That the moulds were not perfect, yet could be made so.

The impression in them was a good one of both sides of the Hawaiian dollar. The witness described to the jury the manner in which such moulds were used. There were marks on the outside of the moulds showing that they had been clamped together. These moulds had not been used for casting impressions. Upon being shown a Hawaiian dollar the witness said that the impressions in the moulds were like it.

Mr. Hobash and Mr. Spear, both manufacturing jewellers, were next examined and gave substantially the same evidence in regard to the moulds, as the first witness. Mr. Hobash, in reply to a question from Mr. Russell, for the defense, stated that a cast copy of a coin is never so perfect as the original. That the moulds produced are so imperfect that a perfect dollar could not be made from them.

In answer to the Attorney-General the witness said that the moulds could not be used for any other purpose than that of casting imitations of the Hawaiian dollar, without changing the impressions inside.

Mr. Silloway, being sworn, that he had known the accused about four months. I was in his shop on the 20th of November last. He was busy with what I thought was a dollar which he had wrapped in paper and held in a vice. He was filing it. On the bench was a coin or medal, which I picked up and put in my pocket. It was not silver. I gave the piece to Mr. O'Connor. The one now shown me is the piece. I saw the pieces of wood now produced. Did not have them in my hand.

In reply to a question from Mr. Russell the witness said that he had formerly lived on Maui. Had been convicted of selling liquor without a license.

W. F. O'Connor being sworn, testified to having visited the accused at his shop more than once. On the day he arrested the accused he was standing at his work bench looking at the moulds. When he saw the witness he shut the blocks together and slipped them into a paper bag. I seized them and told him to come with me. The accused resisted, and called to some other Chinamen to help him. They came from a back room, and others from elsewhere. I called to a native that was passing to help me, and between us we took the man to the Station-house, where I delivered him to Mr. McKeague, with the moulds.

Kawaiulu sworn: Was passing along the street, when he saw the last witness struggling with the accused and other Chinamen. They seemed to be trying to get away something the hooie had in his hand. Was called upon by the hooie to help him, which I did, and we took the accused to the Station-house. Am one of the prison guard.

Mr. McKeague sworn: Am a policeman. Was on duty at the Station-house when Mr. O'Connor and Kawaiulu brought in the accused. Entered the charge and took charge of the prisoner and the moulds produced in Court. They have been in charge of the authorities ever since.

The prosecution here rested their case, and Mr. Russell, for the defense, called Mr. M. D. Monsarrat. Being sworn, the witness produced a plan of the shop occupied by the accused last November. The witness testified that he had prepared the plan to give an idea of the openings into and divisions of the space.

"Wong Kau (the prisoner) was then sworn, and gave evidence in his own behalf. He produced paper to show when he was in Mr. O'Connor's employ, but as the document bore another name instead of his it was ruled out. He stated that his business was that of repairing guns, musical instruments, watches, &c. Does iron-work, pipe-fitting, and other work. The accused then denied having any knowledge of the moulds shown. Had never seen them until Mr. O'Connor fished them out from under a cupboard standing in his (the accused's) shop. They then had a paper bag wrapped around them. This was secured by a string. O'Connor untied them, laid them open, and, after looking at them, took the spurious coin from his pocket and laid it in one of impressions. He then remarked that it was "pretty good. John." He ordered the accused to go with him to the Station-house. Witness swore that he made no resistance; went with O'Connor quietly. He also testified that he did not know the witness Silloway at all, and had no knowledge of the spurious coin. His testimony fully contradicted that of Silloway, O'Connor, and Kawaiulu.

J. H. Hopper, being sworn, testified that the accused had worked for him some months. That he was a very steady man, always on hand, but could not be trusted to do a piece of work at the lathe or elsewhere in the shop, for fear he should spoil the work. The witness was obliged to discharge him as he did not "fill the bill."

Messrs. Wong Kim, Yon Chum, Yim Quon and Wong Leong, countrymen of the prisoner, testified to their acquaintance with him, and to his general good character. Those of the witness who witnessed the arrest testified that they did not see the accused offer any resistance to the officers.

O'Connor, being recalled by the Attorney-General denied having raked out the mould or any other package from under any piece of furniture, but that he had found it as he stated in his testimony. He also stated that when he left the shop he left it open, and when he returned with officer Wood, it was closed. There was no string around the mould.

Wm. Wood, sworn. Am a police-officer. Saw accused in police court, on the 26th. On the 25th, went with O'Connor to the shop and searched it for counterfeiting tools and implements. Found none. Found nothing that pertained to the business of counterfeiting.

The testimony rested here, and after a short recess the Court re-assembled, and Mr. Russell, for the defense, addressed the jury.

He said this case was a novel in the history of jurisprudence in these islands. That it was the first one of alleged counterfeiting that a Hawaiian jury had been called upon to consider. It was only within a very brief period that the Hawaiian Kingdom had a silver coinage of its own, and this was a case where the Crown was attempting to prove that the coin known as the "Kalakaua Collar" was counterfeited.

The indictment in this case is based on the 10th section of that chapter of the Penal Code that relates to counterfeiting, where it prescribes the punishment that shall be inflicted upon whoever has in his possession any mould, pattern or other device adapted or designed for counterfeiting coin. The Crown has endeavored to show you that the defendant had in his possession the two things shown here, the bit of metal and the two pieces of wood. The Crown first puts on experts to tell the jury what these things were. Their testimony was clear and satisfactory to the defense as well as the prosecution. They all said that from these moulds Kalakaua dollars could not be made, they being so imperfect. If the defendant had these things with the intent to make Kalakaua dollars in them he could not do it.

In regard to the point that the defendant had these things "knowingly," the Crown relied upon the evidence of two persons, O'Connor and Silloway. O'Connor's evidence was contradicted by the defendant; their two statements were exactly opposed to each other. Now it was quite possible that O'Connor had the opportunity to place the articles where he found them.

The theory of the defense was, that O'Connor had brought those things to the shop for the purpose of making a case against the defendant. In examining into the antecedents of O'Connor, we find that he has been, to begin with, in the British army. Then he has been in various places, and is finally here without anything in particular to do. He says that if he can get such an appointment here as he desires he may remain; otherwise, he will leave on the next steamer for the Colonies. It is not known that his departure would be very severely felt. He is a bird of passage, and swoops down upon this poor Chinaman and hauls him into this Court as a malefactor. He says that he does this for the good of the public.

Mr. Silloway, the other witness, upon whom the Crown relies to make out its case, is an old resident upon the Islands, and well acquainted with Hawaiian laws. He has felt their pinch himself. He finds the false coin or bit of metal produced, and, instead of giving it to the Deputy-Marshal, hands it over to O'Connor. It would seem to the defense as if there was a conspiracy between these two to deprive the defendant of his liberty.

The evidence of Mr. Hopper shows that the defendant is an indifferent workman, and that of the experts shows that it takes a long time for a man to become skilful enough to counterfeit coin with any degree of accuracy.

Mr. Russell also urged that the open, public character of the defendant's shop was against the idea that he was engaged in any such business that was usually done in dark cellars and other secret places. He was of the opinion that the theory of the defense, that the things were brought to the defendant's shop was the correct one, and that the defendant was entitled to the benefit of any doubt that there might be in the minds of the jurors in regard to his having the things knowingly in his possession.

The Attorney-General in his address to the jury took occasion to compliment the counsel for his ingenious defense of his client. His line of defense was the one usually taken by counsel for those who are caught in the act. Mr. Russell's argument implies in this case that three persons have perjured themselves in the witness-box, for the testimony of Kawaiulu was that the prisoner tried his best to get hold of the moulds seized by O'Connor, knowing that if they were spirited away the Crown would have no evidence to come into court with.

If O'Connor had tried to swear away the liberty of the defendant, he would have managed the affair differently. He had shown in the witness box that he was no fool, and if he had prepared the moulds for the purpose of entrapping the defendant he would have caused them to have shown marks of use.

The native swears positively that O'Connor called to him for help, and that strenuous efforts were made by other Chinamen to spirit away the only evidence the Crown has in the case. As for the charge that O'Connor exerted himself in the case in the hopes of obtaining an appointment, he would say that while O'Connor had no hope or promise of such a reward, yet every man, every policeman, who makes an arrest, does so with the hope of reward of some kind.

As for the shop that the defendant occupied being too open and public for the carrying on of any such business, it was well known that foreigners never went into such shops; the defendant had said himself that no white men ever came into his shop.

The Attorney-General concluded by saying that he hoped he never would undertake the conduct of a case unless he thought there was clear evidence of the guilt of the party he was called upon to prosecute. If this man was not guilty, there was no occasion for his calling for help to destroy the evidence against him. The evidence did not leave any doubt in his mind of the prisoner's guilt.

The Chief Justice in charging the jury read to them the statute, and the particular section on which the charge was based. He called their attention to the mould produced in Court, and showed them that when finished there could be four coins cast at once. He instructed them that if they found, by the testimony, beyond reasonable doubt, that Wong Kau had that mould knowingly in his possession they must find him guilty. If the jury believed the testimony of O'Connor they must convict the accused. It is not necessary that the false coins should be exact copies of the real. If they "resembled" them it was sufficient. The accused was entitled to the benefit of any doubt the jury might have of his guilt, and he left him in their hands.

The jury retired at 4:30 p. m. and at 9:30 rendered a verdict of guilty, they standing 11 to 1, which is sufficient to convict the prisoner.

Injurious to Vision. (American Queen.) Railroad traveling is said to be injurious to vision on account of the vibration which makes print dance before the eyes, and induces such intent observation as to produce fatigue. It is curious to note the eyes of one's fellow-travelers who are looking of the window during a rapid railway journey. The ever-changing landscape induces an oscillation of the visual organs so incessant and continuous as to be perfectly astonishing. The effect of this exaggerated activity and restlessness may be, perhaps, more fatiguing than the steady perusal of well-printed type. It is curious to note how some eyes engaged in looking upon this constantly-shifting scene have monitory passes in their labor, and become motionless, as if staring into vacuity, nature thus snatching a few seconds of much-needed rest, both for brain and eye.

What the Orator Needs. (Church Union.) A good speaker should have the position, the pose of a singing bird, his gestures follow the curve cut by a flying swallow, his tones and emphasis should be such as a pleading child uses on a morning wind; his carriage, that of an Indian walking in the forest. Nature, by the sounding sea, taught the Greek eloquence, and to the painter all are included in "water color."

To Soften Rubber Rings. (Exchange.) The rubber rings used to assist in keeping the air from the fruit cans sometimes become so dry and brittle as to be almost useless. They can be restored to normal condition usually by letting them lie in water in which you have put a little ammonia and two parts water. Sometimes they do not need to lie in this more than five minutes, but frequently a half hour is needed to restore their elasticity.

THE VICTIM OF TATTOO.

His Mature Sufferings for His Early Offense Against Taste.

Recollections of the Tattoo Fever. The Difference of Standpoint Between Fourteen and Forty. Indelible Afflictions.

There is one illicy peculiar to extreme youth that the mature man of the world regrets with greater bitterness than any of his sins, however scarlet and that is his mania for having himself tattooed.

He wonders, as he thinks it over from the settled standpoint of forty years, how he could ever have been such a fool. Why he should have planned and conspired and suffered in order to have his person disfigured, under the hallucination that it was being beautified he cannot now understand.

There is something sad as well as ludicrous in his recollections of the days when he had his epidermis indelibly illustrated. He recalls the anxious thought he gave to the subject, the days when he talked it over with admiring chums who were far in advance of him in exterior decoration, and whose legs and arms, and hands and feet, were covered with every device known to tattoo artists.

And after he had decided to take all risks and have it done, he never thought he gave to the style of picture and the motives which were to be put upon him. Tattooing being perpetuated by seafaring men, most of its designs are of a maritime character.

The mature victim of tattooing gives a snarl of pity to his early self as he remembers that one of the arguments which lured him on in tattooing depravity was that once on the design could never be taken off. This peculiarity which then seemed so admirable has been the grief of his manhood. He was not content to have his arms and legs illustrated, he let the tattooer's fancy have full swing on the back of one of his hands.

He resorts to gloves whenever it is possible to do so; but when he dines among fair women and brave men the anchor on his hand chains him to earth as nothing else could. How can he soar with that indelible proof of early vulgarity before all men's eyes? He manages this most delicate and delicate of his boyhood through a long and esthetic life.

His horror of the embellishments on his hand is largely enhanced by the knowledge that his arm is covered with mottoes and the flags of all nations. In his green and salad days he took a great fancy to the motto of Chevalier Bayard, "Without fear and without reproach," and had it put on his arm indelibly.

In his days of love-making he tells his sweetheart how much ashamed of his Indian ink decorat. as he is; grows confidential and bemoans his boyish folly, then tries to laugh about it in a mischievous way.

When he sees another man all scrawled over with maritime emblems, he is made as diabolically happy as a tame parrot when he sees one of his own kind, native to the forest, ensnared. For the time it seems to relieve him of his own misery.

He doesn't mind what other men think or say about his disfigurements, but he is miserable when he remembers how women hate such things. And there is no help for him. His sins, his weaknesses, his follies he can conceal, but this honest stamp of boyish idleness goes him worse than any other lash. It cuts into his vanity, not his conscience, and any wound in that tender locality is very painful and slow to heal.

He exaggerates the hideousness of the decorations on his epidermis. Really other's scorn, give them a thought, but he can't realize that. He is the great figure in the universe in his own opinion, and anything like a blot upon his fair exterior is a continual menace to his peace of mind.

Perhaps it is a heart with a dagger through it which ornaments the back of his hand. This being the case, he is compelled to hear a thousand witless witticisms about wearing his heart even more conspicuously than upon his sleeve.

There are, in all probability, very much more objectionable pictures on his soul, but he gives them no particular attention. They neither disturb his sleep nor distress him when he is awake. He would gladly exchange the tattooed heart on his hand for eight or ten of them and think it a great bargain. Curious, isn't it, that a Memish on his body should seem so deplorable to a human being, while the freecing on his soul is of no moment to him; but of just such contemptible stuff are we men made.

Secretary: "My master wishes to know why the expenses of the kitchen were not less during his absence at the seaside?"

Cook: "Please tell the master that one being absent doesn't make any difference."

Ben. Butler and "Old Hutch."

There was an incident in Gen. Butler's recent reception at Chicago which was not set down in the original programme. It occurred in this wise: Upon the general's return from his speechmaking he was waited upon in his hotel parlor by several gentlemen, among them Mr. E. Z. Hutchinson, a prominent member of the board of trade, but familiarly known as "Old Hutch."

"You do that again, sir," he roared. He revolved like a top whirled by an urchin, and as he faced "Old Hutch" that sinister eye of his was blazing with wrath.

Old Hutch's intentions, of course, were purely honorable, but this boisterous and offensively physical way of approaching a gentleman by bounding on his back door is not pleasant. Of course Old Hutch may excuse himself by saying that this is the common way on the board, where friendly feelings are illustrated by hearty thwacks on the back, and an unusual degree of personal esteem is indicated by pushing your friend's hat down over his eyes, but the etiquette of the board is hardly a proper code to follow in paying respects to a presidential candidate.

She Ignored Him. [Merchant Traveller.] "Let's go and call on Miss Jones," said one dude to another. "Now, don't think I like her," replied the other. "Why not?" "She's quite bright, I think."

Vandalism in the Lane Kill Club. [Detroit Free Press.] The dastard who entered Paradise hall the other evening by way of the roof, and carried off three skulls of Oliver Cromwell, may never be brought to punishment in this world, as he left no clews behind, but he will certainly catch it red-hot in the next.

The Wrong Man. [New York Mail and Express.] "Pa," asked a little boy, "which saint was it that said 'Take a little wine for the stomach's sake'?" "St. Paul, I believe."

Progress. An Altona burglar went into a woman's room and hid under the bed. Of course he was found. A burglar who has no more knowledge of his business than a dog has of his name would be hung straight off on general principles.

ROYAL HAWAIIAN HOTEL.

GEORGE H. FASSETT, - Manager.

The Royal Hawaiian Hotel is one of the leading architectural structures of Honolulu. The grounds upon which it stands comprise an entire square of about four acres, fronting on Hotel Street. This large area affords ample room for a lawn and beautiful walks, which are laid out most artistically with flowering plants and tropical trees. There are twelve pretty cottages within this charming enclosure; all under the Hotel management. The Hotel and cottages afford accommodations for 200 guests. The basement of the Hotel contains the finest billiard hall in the city; also, a first-class bar, well stocked with fine wines and liquors.

The main entrance is on the second floor, to the right of which are the elegantly furnished parlors. A broad passage way leads from the main hall to the dining-room. These apartments open on to broad verandas, where a magnificent view of the Nuuanu Mountains may be seen through the wealth of tropical foliage that surrounds the balconies.

The fare dispensed is the best the market affords, and is first-class in all respects. Hotel and cottages are supplied with pure water from an artesian well on the premises. The Clerk's office is furnished with the Telephone, by which communication is had with the leading business firms of the city.

EVERY EFFORT HAS BEEN MADE And Money Lavishly Expended under the Present Able Management to make this establishment the

"MODEL FAMILY HOTEL."

A Reputation it Enjoys and MOST JUSTLY MERITS.
