Life History Leading To Murderous Deeds

A remarkable description of the alleged murderer E. M. Jones, his life from boyhood and all the details which go to make up basis for a claim of insanity, is contained in the long hypothetical question prepared by Attorneys A. G. M. Robertson and J. J. Dunne, for Dr. Mays, expert on mental diseases. It was based on the testimony of the case by witnesses collected from all over the islands, and contains a very comprehensive statement of all the circumstances that were placed before the jury, with the story of the shooting as told by Jones himself. With detail piled on detail, it goes through Jones' career from his fifth year, and it made up a sum total of experiences and characteristics on which Dr. Mays unhesitatingly and positively declared Jones insane. The problem was stated to the doctor as follows:

Out Of The SEA CAME The Ships

Massive and big and strong there came out of the western sea today the greatest aggregation of warships that it has ever seen Honolulu's fortune to see. After a long 3400 mile cruise all the way from the Orient, one of Uncle Sam's most powerful collection of sea fighters sighted the island of Oahu before day break this morning and by 9:30 o'clock this morning lay at anchor off the harbor. It was a beautiful and inspiring sight to those ashore it was a welcome view of land to those on the fleet. They came together in most impressive formation with the flagship Kentucky in the lead, then the battleship Wisconsin, then the battleship Oregon, then the cruiser New Orleans, and Cincinnati and Raleigh and Albany.

The news of the coming of the fleet was known two hours before Diamond Head Charlie picked them up off Barber's Point. It was the people at Makaha who first reported the advent of the fleet. The vessel passed within three miles of the shore at 6:30 o'clock this morning. Captain Holt was then and he realized that an event in the history of Honolulu was approaching. He telephoned the news long before 7 o'clock to Honolulu that the vessels were coming "Seven of them" he exclaimed.

A TRIO OF ADMIRALS. The work of coaling the fleet will now be a much bigger proposition than the local officers of the Naval station had expected. If Admiral Evans does not intend to hurry the coaling however the task will not be very difficult.

THE TOWN SURPRISED. The first report was hardly credited. No body expected the entire fleet to arrive together. It had been expected that the cruiser division accompanied by the collier Pompey, would be the first to make its appearance and then trailing several days later would be the big battleships. But Holt was right. The entire aggregation of warships this morning Kaena Point and was approaching Honolulu harbor in complete formation a perfect fleet-in-being: every vessel keeping the line of formation perfectly and holding off equidistant from the others, but all within signalling distance of the rest of the fleet.

As soon as the news of the sighting of the fleet was known, Captain Rodman U. S. N. got up steam in the little launch from the Iroquois and went out to the mouth of the harbor to examine the conditions at the entrance. He felt certain that the big fleet would be brought into the harbor by orders of Admiral Bob Evans and he wanted to see exactly how the mouth of the channel was, as it was thought Rodman would probably be called upon to bring some of the fleet into the harbor.

The pilots too began to live up and to bring out their full force. Captains Macaulay, Saunders, Lorenzen and Cameron were at the pilot house almost as the fleet came into view. There is a difference of at least two hours in the time from Makaha and Barber's Point and not until 8:30 o'clock did Diamond Head Charlie pick up the fleet. When he did the whistle of the electric light works began giving forth such prolonged blasts that the public immediately surmised that the fleet and not the belated mail steamer Ventura from San Francisco was being signalled.

It was hard to pick up all of the boats the instant the fleet rounded the Point. Some of the watchers at the pilot house could not make out the seven boats reported by Holt. Others were sure that they saw the seven vessels. Captain Rodman came back into the harbor and stopped beneath the pilot house with his launch to get a line on the vessels. "How many of them are there," exclaimed Rodman to those on the lookout. "Seven, Sir" answered Captain Macaulay. "We think the battleships are in the lead." "Look at the leading ship" said Rodman "and see if she is floating a blue pennant with two white stars in it and then see if one of the cruisers is showing a red pennant with a white star. Those will be the only signals flying as they indicate the flagships." Gradually as the vessels came nearer and nearer these flags could be made out. "The leading vessel shows the blue flag," shouted Captain Macaulay "and the fourth vessel the red one." And this was correct. As the vessels came up in line the battleships were in the lead. First rode the Kentucky the flagship of Admiral Evans, then the Wisconsin, then the Oregon, then the new cruiser New Orleans on which was Admiral Cooper and then came the other cruisers. The view of the vessels was perfect. The air was perfectly clear and the formation of the line as well as the outline of the boats could readily be seen as they neared the land.

"They are hitting it up" claimed the pilots. "They will be up in about an hour." In a few minutes all four of the pilots boarded their boats and started out of the harbor to meet the fleet. Captains Saunders and Macaulay went in the first boat and Captain Lorenzen and Cameron in the other. It was twenty minutes past 9 o'clock when the Kentucky steamed up off the mouth of the harbor and came to a stop, then rapidly followed the other vessels at intervals of from five to ten minutes.

The quarantine launch was among the first to reach the side of the flagship. Then the Customs launch Warship Witch with Governor Carter, Secretary Atkinson, Superintendent of Public Works Holloway and Collector Stackable aboard soon went out of the harbor and joined the fleet of small craft that was rapidly surrounding the various warships. Over at the Naval Station every body was busy. The Iroquois was hauled over from the Ewa side of Naval Slip No. 2 to the Waikiki side in order to make room for one of the battleships. The various Naval scores with coal piled high upon them for the fuelling of the fleet were gotten in available places at the Naval wharves. Admiral Terry arrived before the vessels came into the harbor. This morning the rear admiral's pennant the blue flag with two white stars, was flying at the Naval Station but as soon as the Kentucky arrived, this flag was hauled down and a red flag with the white stars was substituted. Admiral Cooper the commander of the cruiser division was showing a red flag when the New Orleans arrived off the port but when the change with the Admiral's flag at the Naval Station occurred Admiral Cooper hauled down his red flag and hoisted a white one. This change of signals while not possessing particular significance to the landmen is obligatory by Naval regulation. As the ranking officer of the fleet in port Admiral Evans displayed the blue flag, as the second officer, Admiral Terry showed the red flag while Admiral Cooper as the third in rank of admirals, showed the white flag. By bringing his entire fleet to port together, Admiral Evans surprised nearly every body. Few people had had any idea that the battleship division would pick up the cruisers. The cruisers had been steaming very slowly up to the time they arrived off Midway last Saturday. The supposition was until this morning, that the battleships would do the same thing. Admiral Evans caught up with the advance squadron however some where between Midway and Honolulu. When he caught them they all crowded on steam and hurried to this port in fast time. The collier Pompey did not arrive with the fleet but was left far behind.

The work of coaling the fleet will now be a much bigger proposition than the local officers of the Naval station had expected. If Admiral Evans does not intend to hurry the coaling however the task will not be very difficult.

Four Witnesses On At Once

A QUARTETTE OF DOCTORS QUESTIONED SIMULTANEOUSLY IN THE JONES MURDER TRIAL—DRS. MINER, HODGINS, WAYSON AND SINCLAIR ARE TO HEAR THE LONG HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.

The novel spectacle of putting in question to four witnesses at once is the latest feature of the Jones murder trial. By consent of Attorney General Andrews for the prosecution and Robertson and Dunne for the defense it was agreed before Judge Gear this morning that the long hypothetical question, involving Jones' mental condition, be put to Doctors Miner, Hodgins, Wayson and Sinclair all at once. They were all sworn at once and the prosecution was ready with the question, which takes nearly an hour to read, when an argument intervened over the matter of qualifications. According to the procedure agreed upon the four sworn medical witnesses are to listen to the question all at once. Then three of them are to retire from the court room and the other one is to give his answer and is to be cross examined, the rest remaining out of hearing. The other three are to be called in turn for answer and cross-examination. Owing to the length of the question to be put, which is substantially that which is published in full in today's Star, much time is saved by asking all at once. Dr. Miner was on the stand when court adjourned at noon, and the attorneys were arguing as to qualifications. The doctor's testimony showed his status as a physician all right, but contentions were advanced by the defense that to testify as to sanity a witness must qualify as a specialist on mental diseases. Arguments as to whether Dr. Wayson had done so were made in the absence of the jury. The other witnesses were called in rebuttal this morning, in addition to the doctors. Jack Lucas testified that he had worked with the defendant Jones and considered him sane. Jones had been in his employ on the Kaplani estate building, and he didn't believe from associations with the defendant then that the latter was insane. Makiema, a conductor on the Rapid Transit, was produced to testify that Jones was not drunk when he rode on a car during the evening of August 22, but his testimony was ruled out as not being rebuttal.

HONOLULU HAS A CHIP

IT IS ON THE CITY'S SHOULDER AND ATHLETES OF THE NAVAL SQUADRON ARE INVITED TO KNOCK IT OFF IF THEY WANT TO INDULGE IN ATHLETIC CONTESTS.

Honolulu proposes to put an athletic chip on its shoulder now that the American war fleet has arrived, also to open up in a hospitable way to receive and entertain those who came with the fleet. A meeting of those interested has been called for this evening, and it is proposed to arrange for football games, baseball, boxing contests and any other kind of contest which the visitors want to indulge in. There are Honolulu teams ready to engage them in almost any kind of a game they want. The Merchants' Association and Chamber of Commerce committees, and the rowing association, baseball league and football league representatives and all others interested, are to meet this evening in the pavilion on the roof garden of the Alexander Young Hotel. The meeting is for the purpose of discussing how to entertain the visitors and also how to try and do them up in athletic contests.

DOLE GIVES A HEAVY SENTENCE VENTURA LOST MAN OVERBOARD

PUNISHMENT OF KURIHARA SPREADS ALARM AMONG THE JAPANESE DEFENDANTS. Judge Dole this morning sentenced Kurihara, who was convicted of importing a Japanese woman for immoral purposes, to two years' imprisonment. The judge remarked in passing sentence that he had taken into consideration evidence showing that Kurihara was merely a tool of another man.

The S. S. Ventura arrived today shortly after 1 o'clock, about five hours behind time from San Francisco. The vessel was delayed sailing. She encountered good weather during the trip. Joseph Fennel, a cook, disappeared from the vessel Monday night. He is supposed to have fallen or else thrown himself overboard while under the influence of liquor. He was 37 years of age and a native of England.

The vessel left San Francisco December 10, so brought a week's mail. She had a big crowd of passengers for Honolulu, there being 83 people in all departments including 51 in the cabin. The vessel is scheduled to depart at 4 p. m. tomorrow for Pago Pago, Auckland and Sydney. A five-masted schooner was sighted off Koko Head this morning. She did not put any signals up and is evidently passing by.

Gov. Carter Goes Out. The arrival of the battleships with the cruiser fleet was unexpected and led to mistaken reports. The four cruisers and the Pompey were at first announced. Then as the steamers came nearer it was seen that there were seven of them. The three battleships in the lead were first recognized. Their trip from Yokohama had been a quick one. Leaving five days after the cruisers they had caught the latter, setting a good thirteen-knot record all the way across. The cruisers after leaving Midway increased slightly their speed of the earlier part of the trip. Among the many launches, and other craft to go out to the vessels at anchor was the Water Witch, having on board Governor Carter, Secretary Atkinson, Collector Stackable and Superintendent of Public Works Holloway. She left the Inter-Island wharf just as the fleet were taking up their positions and

Electricity in the Home And Why You Should Use

Incandescent electric lighting is indispensable to the comfort of the modern home. The quality of the light is far superior to any other. The cost is very slightly above kerosene. The annoyances of broken lamp chimneys, smoke, trimmings of wicks, excessive heat, disagreeable odor, refilling of lamps, etc., are entirely removed by use of electricity. A simple turn of the switch in the wall or chandelier gives instant light and saves groping about for matches. The light can be left burning without danger of fire while occupants are out of the house. The quality of light is soft, steady and white—the quantity to suit your needs. We have numerous devices for saving light and valuable suggestions for old, as well as new subscribers. The conveniences and desirable features of electricity over all other illuminators are innumerable and we will take pleasure in telling you the cost of house wiring and fixtures.

A PLAGUE SPOT.

The resolution to annex San Domingo to the United States which has been introduced into the Senate may not pass, but it certainly should.

The history of both San Domingo and Haiti bristles with the names of generals, princes, archbishops, presidents and even a couple of emperors.

The superstition of the Voodoo or Vodoo is practiced by those who appear to be the most enlightened. This involves at times a human sacrifice, and was brought from the west coast of Africa by slaves from Dahomey.

To cleanse this ugly plague spot of the earth is manifestly the duty and the destiny of the Great Republic.

AN EXHIBIT.

To those who are unacquainted with the amount of work done in the schools, the specimens, coming in from the various institutions all over the Territory, will be a revelation.

A few years ago manual training was a thing almost unknown in the schools. In 1887 there were only two public schools in which sewing was taught, and this in a desultory manner.

In addition to sewing a good deal of knife work is done, and the result are very surprising to those who have not given much attention to the subject. This is a sort of modified Swedish sloyd, adapted to the conditions of American schools.

In many schools luhala and bamboo work and mat weaving are taught. From time to time Hawaiian women have been employed by the Department of Public Instruction to teach the teachers the proper methods of weaving and braiding.

Wherever there is some special industry carried on in a district, the pupils of that district are encouraged to occupy themselves with it and to become skillful.

Great attention has been given throughout the public schools to the keeping of the school lots in order, by the children, and systematic instruction in cultivation has been given.

A great addition to the present exhibit from the Hawaiian schools will be the specimens of lace work. This is a new industry which is destined to take a prominent place in the Territory.

Taken all in all, the school exhibit of the Territory of Hawaii promises to be of advantage to the community, in that it shows that in primary education it can hold its own alongside exhibits of a similar character in many parts of the mainland.

Afraid of the Big Guns mark made it easily perceptible. This contrast to the bobbing of the launch made the massiveness of the man-of-war all the more impressive.

The Water Witch made a second visit to the Kentucky, and might have landed some of her party, but for a sudden warning that she was about to salute.

The governor said he didn't care about being in the line of fire. The rest of those on board, while willing to stand being wet and to risk seasickness, had not come out with any intention of getting near the wrong end of the Kentucky's guns when they were in action, and so the Water Witch reversed her engines and backed off.

It is the greatest sight Honolulu has seen since the arrival of the first transports bringing troops for the Philippines. On the return trip the Water Witch gave a tow to a boat of marines from the Kentucky, who were pulling ashore to the naval station.

KEPOIKAI BRINGS SUIT

THE TREASURER COMMENCES AN ACTION WHICH WILL TEST THE COUNTY ACT—DECLARES THE ACT IS VOID AND SEEKS TO PREVENT TRANSFER OF WATER WORKS TO COUNTIES.

Treasurer A. N. Kepoikai is bringing a suit which will thoroughly test the County Act. It is a petition for an injunction to restrain Superintendent of Public Works Holloway and Andrew Brown, Superintendent of the Water Works, from turning over to the counties the water works bureaus.

Kepoikai's petition sets forth that he is Treasurer of the Territory and has charge of the revenues and that Holloway and Brown are about to turn over the water works, which are an important source of revenue, to the various counties. The act creating the counties is void as a whole, says Kepoikai, and especially in those portions referring to the water works, and the circuit court is therefore asked to enjoin Holloway and Brown from turning over the works.

Water Witch made a second visit to the Kentucky, and might have landed some of her party, but for a sudden warning that she was about to salute. The little launch was closed up under a heavy broadside of guns, when one of Young's launches yelled that he had been ordered away from the guns, as a salute was to be fired.

The governor said he didn't care about being in the line of fire. The rest of those on board, while willing to stand being wet and to risk seasickness, had not come out with any intention of getting near the wrong end of the Kentucky's guns when they were in action, and so the Water Witch reversed her engines and backed off.

A HOT PLACE. One of the most uncomfortable places in the world to live in is the island of Bohrein in the Persian gulf. The annual mean temperature there is 99 degrees.

LIFE LEADING TO MURDEROUS DEEDS

Take the case of a native of those islands, about 41 years of age. When a boy, he lived with his parents upon another island and in his youth he became very ill. At the commencement of this illness, he was at a place where expert medical attention could not easily be had, and where the only treatment available was that afforded by such remedies as happened to be in the house. At this place, he was ill for 4 or 5 months, during a portion of this time, he was confined to his bed; he suffered very greatly from meningitis, or brain fever; he became weak and emaciated, more skin and bone; his mind wandered; he was out of his head; he mumbled to himself like one in a dream—mumbled in a silly way about all sorts of things; and this condition of his was particularly marked during the latter portion of this period of 4 or 5 months. During this attack, lumps appeared upon his head; they began to appear when the attack commenced, and they gradually enlarged; there were four of these lumps the largest of them was situated on the top of his head, and the others were close by; and although medicines were applied to them, yet the poitices did no good. Finally, he was removed to an adjacent town for further treatment. Here he was attended by a physician, now deceased; his high fever continued; the lumps still remained upon his head; he was often in a state of delirium, and only repeated calls could elicit any attention.

After a time, he apparently recovered so far as to come to Honolulu to school. His school life was a failure; he was stupid, forgetful and solitary—not like the other boys. He could not study; he was always behind; he always failed to learn or remember his lessons; and he made no progress in his studies. His failure of memory brought him many whippings. He was usually alone; he did not usually play with the other boys; he would often disappear, and on being searched for would be found alone in a box that contained sand intended for chickens and upon being questioned, would not answer, but would mumble to himself. This mumbling to himself was of frequent recurrence in situations other than the sand box; he often sat down alone and muttered and talked to himself and this mumbling occurred at night as well as by day.

During this school life he was afflicted by a twitching in the face, eye, cheek and mouth, accompanied by a twisting of the neck, a sort of pull in the face and neck; and this peculiarity was frequently observable. When addressed by the school master, he would stare. Physically, he was weak, but although many games were played by the boys which called for the exercise of no great physical strength, still he did not join in those games and only other school boys who like himself, did not usually join in the play, was an idiot. Some times, he would be whipped and yet while the other boys usually cried during the whipping, yet he did not cry at the whipping, but did afterwards, when it was all over. Sometimes, his school mates would tease him; and when they did so, he would get excited and wild, and would pursue them, and when his pursuit did not result in his catching them, would burst into tears and go into a mad fit; and would remain mad all day and sometimes the next day. As a student, he was surpassed by his younger brother—two years younger, he never was able to recollect his school lessons; and whippings for forgetfulness were daily occurrences; but notwithstanding his punishment, yet he continued in the same offense—he paid no attention to the punishment. He never obtained any prize; he never obtained any promotion; and when spoken to was slow to answer.

This school life continued for about 2 years; and when he left the school he went to a ranch upon another island; and there he remained, doing the work of a ranch until he was about 19 years old. During this period, for about a year, he got some instructions from a lady who happened to be there; but he never got beyond the second or third reader. He had no other instruction; his mental training never got beyond that; he followed no intellectual pursuit or independent study; he made no attempt to develop his intellectual faculties; and so far as we are advised, the sum total of such instruction as he ever did get, was limited to the above mentioned 2 years in Honolulu, and the year of instruction upon the ranch.

When he was about 19 years of age, he married; his married life with his first wife was a happy one; they had four children; they got along all right, and lived happily without any trouble. A portion of his first married life was spent upon another island, and a portion here in Honolulu; his occupation was largely that of ranch hand as it had been before, except that he did some work for the natives; and possibly on other roads; but he made no attempt of which we are advised to develop his mind or exercise his faculties.

Ever since he was a boy, he was afflicted with pains in his head; and although these pains were not permanent or steady, yet they recurred from time to time and in varying situations and under varying circumstances. During this period of his first marriage, these pains continued to afflict him; and while he was staying at Kona for a period of six months, between the years 1890 and 1892, his wife and children being there, he complained several times of the recurrence of these pains in the head. When he complained of these pains, he did peculiar things. Thus when at the sea, shore, fishing, when the pain would attack him, he would suddenly leave his fishing and run up an adjacent bluff; when asked for an explanation of his conduct, he would say nothing, but would remain quite still, and say nothing; he remained there some time less than an hour, and upon coming down announced that the pain was gone. Upon another occasion, at another place on the sea coast, he repeated this performance; and upon being asked why he should go up this bluff if he had a pain in his head, he answered that it was the pain in his head which made him run up the bluff. Upon another occasion, while at Kona, in this period, he suddenly disappeared one morning, and upon being searched for was found about 7 miles from the house, sitting on a log of wood. When asked for an explanation, he declared that he came to chase hogs. He had no dogs with him with which to chase hogs, and when asked how he could catch these hogs without dogs, he pointed to the dog of the searcher, which had come with him, and said "Now let us chase pigs." The person who was searching for him told him it was Sunday and that he should go home; but he persisted in chasing pigs, and finally one was caught and killed; the friend then again urged him to go home, but he insisted on continuing to chase pigs, which was done but without success; and although the friend persisted in his endeavors to get him home, still he refused and kept going and going ahead. This continued until the sun was below the horizon; he was then complaining of pains in his head, and so his friend suggested that as they were so far away from home, they should stay where they were all night. They had been going rather and farther from home all the time. They stayed in the woods all that night; and finally, on the next day, his friend got him home; indeed, he was not in the habit of making any trouble with his family, but got along all right with them.

Finally, his first wife sickened and died; and then he got along as best he could until he procured employment with a local merchant, where he remained for some 6 or 7 years. For very many years, the subject of this question has been addicted to the steady drinking of intoxicating liquors. This use of intoxicating liquors became habitual to him, and he finally during the years 1901, 1902 and 1903 became a habitual drunkard. At times, he would be in a condition of furious intoxication; at other times he would get into a condition of drunken frenzy; and at all times, he yielded to his love for liquor. During his employment with the local merchant to whom I have referred, he was a heavy drinker; and although his fellow employees could smell the liquor from him, yet, during business hours, he never got drunk enough to prevent his work. While employed here, he showed an odd manner; he was cranky at times; he was generally peculiar, and different from the other men employed there; when given an order, he would tell the person giving him the order to go to hell, and when told that the manager of his department had directed the thing to be done, he would say sometimes let him off from work, although he sometimes stayed away of his own accord; and in the evenings when these pains recurred, he would go to the home of a relative where his son was living, to have his son lend him his head, and he tried to relieve those pains by inhaling the odor of witchhazel. At times, he would go for as long as a month without suffering from these pains, and then would recur. While he was not discharged from this place of employment, and his departure therefrom was occasioned by his habits of drinking.

While he was with this business house, he married again, on or about March 17th, 1899. He was very much in love with his second wife, enamored of her, infatuated with her; and he frequently gave expression to the depth of the affection which he entertained for her; and the strength and power of his love for the woman clearly appears in all his utterances. For a time he and his second wife seemed to get on without any apparent or visible trouble; but about two years after the marriage, he commenced to complain about her conduct; he thought she was acting disagreeably, that when he got home from a hard days work she would go out, and that when he spoke to her about it, she told him to shut up, and mind his own business. From this time on, she was constantly in his thoughts; and the fact of her going out so worried him that he would get release from his employment and go home, only to find that she was out again; and he announced to a relative that in a certain dream that he had, he was startled about the whereabouts of a certain ring of hers, and that he asked her about the ring; and that she did not know what had become of it; and this preyed upon him. Notwithstanding that, he loved her very deeply and very dearly, his mind became filled with suspicions against her personal purity; but his suspicions were wholly without foundation.

His causeless suspicions grew and developed until he became fully dominated by them; and against the fact and in irrational opposition to the fact, he firmly believed that his wife was unfaithful and untrue to him. The belief that she was untrue to him seemed to fill his mind to the exclusion of other things; he constantly brooded over this belief; he became downhearted and despondent, declined to talk, ate very little indeed, worried constantly, and drank heavily. He gave expression to his unfounded belief by accusing his innocent wife of criminal intercourse with other men; the state of things between them became intolerable; and one of the results of this condition of things was that he was arrested on the charge of assault and battery upon her and upon her mother who interfered in their difficulty and he was convicted of the charge upon the mother-in-law, from which conviction, he took an appeal. On the occasion of this assault and battery, the subject of this question was in a state of furious intoxication, and in the course of the occurrence said in substance that he believed they would put him in jail for his actions, but that even if they put him in jail for three years, still he had Indian blood in him and would be revenged and would kill all three of them. As already said he was arrested, but he did not go to jail.

Finally, his wife sued him for a divorce, alleging that at frequent intervals, "he causelessly accused this libellant of holding criminal intercourse with men other than said libellee," and "that during nearly all of their said married life, this libellant has been tormented by the accusations and reproaches of libellee (all made without a foundation of truth) that libellant whenever she was absent from the presence of libellee for any considerable time was indulging in criminal intrigues with other men." And in this sworn libel, his wife further complained of his habit of drinking intoxicating liquors and spoke of his "condition of drunken frenzy—an incident in a life of habitual drunkenness, to which he was then addicted;" and further spoke of his attempted reformation and then explained "that he later relapsed into drunkenness," and then described his conduct, to quote the precise language, "while in a state of furious intoxication." This libel for divorce was signed and sworn to by his wife on July 6th, 1903; he was served with a copy of it in the usual way; he interposed no defense; and on August 10th, 1903, the Court granted his wife a divorce.

The commencement, progress and termination of this divorce proceeding affected him very greatly. He was much opposed to this divorce, saying that although he believed that his wife was not virtuous, still he loved her; he could not part with her, she could have every cent that he was able to get. On July 8th, a couple of days after the divorce suit was commenced, he wrote to his wife the following letter: (Here the letter of Jones protesting against divorce proceedings, already published is given.)

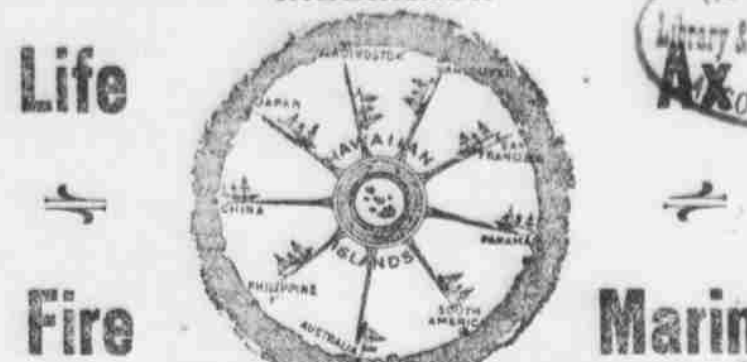

He exhibited this letter to several people, inquiring what they thought of it, but when he did so, he broke down and cried like a child. When he was served with the papers in the divorce suit, he came to a friend and asked him if he had heard the news, and said that he had been served with divorce papers and that he wanted no divorce because he loved his wife; and then he flung the divorce papers on his friend's desk and walked out without another word, leaving the papers there; and shortly after he returned, got the papers and left without saying a word to his friend. The divorce suit occupied his mind, he would ask when the suit would be called, and why he should make any answer in it; and when he was told that it was necessary to file an answer if he wished to contest the case, answered that he did not want any divorce, because he loved her, but that he would not file any answer. He kept inquiring about the divorce suit until two days before the suit was heard, when he called upon the same friend about half past six in the morning to ask if the case would be called that week. His friend invited him to have a cup of coffee. He said he did not care to eat, but asked for a drink, and his friend said that he had nothing to drink. His friend then suggested that it was his breakfast hour, and together they walked out of the building in which they were. When they had gone part way out, the subject of this question suddenly turned without a word, and ran back into the office which they had just left, closing the door behind him. His friend followed him and found him sitting in a chair; there was a strange look in his face which his friend who had known him many years, had never seen there before; his eyes glared, his jaws kept going as if he were chewing something, he kept turning and twisting his body in the chair. His friend uttered a word and his friend was frightened by his appearance and manner. He kept this up for about twenty minutes, during which time his friend repeatedly called him by name, but he made no response. His friend kept asking him what the matter was, and suddenly, the subject of this question put his hands on his friend's shoulders and asked him if he knew how much he loved his wife. He followed this by asking his friend to see her and ask her to drop the assault and battery case. His friend said that he would, whereupon the subject of this question became silent, and after a time went out. When the friend returned, the subject of this question was writing with a pen at his friend's desk. He tore up what he had written, and then commenced to write again, and his friend saw him writing and went down town for an hour. When his friend returned he found him with his body bent over the desk and his head down on his arms with his face covered. He stayed with his friend until noon, his friend asked him to have lunch, he refused to eat, his friend stayed with him then until half past one, during which time the subject of this question remained silent, would not talk, and merely stared at his friend. At half past one his friend told him he had to go out, which he did, returning at four p. m.; the subject of this question was still there with a magazine in his hand which he did not read. He said that he was getting along all right, but could not help thinking about his wife, and suddenly burst into tears, and it took him quite a while to get over his tears. About five o'clock in the evening his friend suggested that they go home to his friend's house, have supper and sleep there; he said yes, and they started. When they got to the entrance of the building, a car passed on the street, probably 200 feet or so away, and he said that he saw his wife on that car, and refused to go any further with his friend. He made no attempt to overtake the car, and notwithstanding that the car had gone, he went on with his friend. He then said that he wanted to see his son; his friend said all right, and asked him to come to his house after he had seen his son; and the subject of this question said that he would, and went away. He did not come to his friend's house. Persons who had the opportunity to observe him not only during the time of these divorce proceedings, but also at other times both prior and subsequent thereto, concur in stating that the subject of this question was out of his mind and insane.

In April or May, 1903, the subject of this question was employed in breaking up sunny old wrecks of snips in the harbor of Honolulu. At first he was a mere employee, but later his associates gave him a share in the enterprise. While here, and especially during the months of June, July and August, he drank very heavily, and in great excess, of intoxicating liquors; his companions would detect his drinking early in the morning; and he would continue his drinking through the day renewing his liquor from time to time. Most of them did not see where he kept his liquor, although they knew that he was constantly drinking; the fact is that he kept the bottle concealed under a pile of wood. During this time, he seemed to care for nothing but drink; he could not eat; he frequently refused food; he often went all day long, working hard at heavy work, without eating anything at all. The amount of work that he was able to do under these conditions was unusual; at times, he would do more work than all three of his companions; and his extraordinary physical action excited the surprise of his associates. At other times, he would suddenly stop his work, without any apparent cause or reason, and stare blankly at nothing, or bend his head and look down, and he would remain in this abstract condition until his companions would recall him to himself, and it would be necessary to call him more than once. He disregarded the proprieties; usually, he worked stark naked except for his malo; near by there lived a shipwright and his wife, with whom, on the occasions about to be mentioned, the subject of this question had no business whatever; and on several occasions, with no clothing except this malo, he would go upon the premises of this shipwright and in view of his wife, apparently without any conception of what he was doing; and he has come in from the wrecks to a public wharf on the waterfront of this city with no other clothing upon his person except his malo and a shirt. The man underwent a noticeable change; he became downhearted; he would remain silent; he would get brooding; instead of being pleasant and good natured as formerly, he became irritable and snappish; he would appear lost, not knowing what he was going; he was unable to remember certain simple signals necessary to his work, although frequently explained to him; he would lose instruments used in his work; he would break into tears; he was incoherent in speech, and would break off his talk, or apparently to one subject to the other; when at a certain wedding, he kept away from the guests, and sat alone upon the veranda of the house in the dark, never leaving his seat except to get a drink, and continued this from Saturday night until Sunday night; and his associates on the wrecks were afraid to work with him, and kept on the watch for him. During this period he said very little indeed; to use the language of one witness, he was starving himself to death, working hard all day but eating nothing; and in the language of another witness, when asked if he wished to starve himself, would reply by asking for a drink. He drank heavily, and carried his drinking into the night and the early morning; drink was all he cared for; and when he would take up a book, apparently to read, he would stare at the open book, but never turn a leaf, and when his attention was called to this, he simply stared. He was afflicted with insomnia; he was unable to sleep; and he would be about the house at all hours of the late night and early morning. He was constantly worrying over his wife; his belief that she was untrue to him, the proceedings in divorce, and his great love for her, were always in his mind; he spoke of his trouble to many persons; he wrote a letter to her, asked various persons what they thought of it, and burst into tears over it; and he complained that his great worry over his wife prevented him from sleeping. The change in the man extended to his physical appearance also. After June, 1903, he looked like a total wreck; he fell away, and grew thin; his face was sunken, and marked by lines and dark blotches as big as a half dollar, and his face showed trouble and was drawn and haggard; his eyes were wild and glary; and his facial expression was changed.

On the evening of Saturday, August 22nd, 1903, between 7 and 8 o'clock, he entered a certain saloon in Honolulu, where he accidentally met an acquaintance of four or five years standing; the acquaintance remarked to him that he was lucky to get rid of his wife, and thereupon the subject of this question, to use the language of the witness, wild and flared up and talked of his love for his wife; he did not look as he formerly did; his facial expression was changed; his eyes were wild; and the acquaintance had never seen a similar look in his face before. Between eight and nine o'clock on the same night, the subject of this question entered a different saloon; he had then been drinking; and in this second saloon he purchased a gallon of California Madeira wine which he had put into a demijohn; he took a glassful of this wine, and then left. About half past ten o'clock on that same night, he boarded one of the Rapid Transit cars; he was drunk; the conductor of the car stated: "I knew he was drunk;" his side was twitching; his head was down; he acted strange; he acted queer, as the conductor explained; while on the car, and while the car was in quick motion, the conductor was compelled to hold him for a block to prevent him from falling off; and when he did get off the car, the conductor held him.

On the evening of August 26th, 1903, the subject of this question appeared at the home of a relative, where his son was then living; when he entered the house, he asked his son if he knew him; his son said yes; he then asked where Linda, meaning his wife, was; his son said that she was dead; and then he grunted and shook his head. After his son had told him of the visit of the police, he asked his son to get him some whiskey, and his son got him a bottle, of which he drank about two-thirds, as nearly as his son could judge the amount; and then they started for the police station. On the way the son procured for his father some cakes and a glass of beer. At this time, the subject of this question was cold, wet, hungry and thirsty; his only clothing was a coat and a pair of denim trousers; he was barefooted; his feet and legs were cut and torn by lanterns; he was like a drunken man; he was shaggy and haggard and half starved; and what clothing he had on was wet. When they reached the police station, he was taken at once to a room, where he made the following statement to the Deputy Sheriff in the presence of a stenographer, after having been cautioned that he was not obliged to answer any questions, and that whatever he did say would be used against him upon a charge of murder in the first degree.

(Here followed Jones' statement to the police at the time when he was arrested, telling of his killing his wife and mother-in-law and of his terrible experience in trying to escape. Then the doctor was asked if he considered the subject of the question sane or insane, and his answer was that the subject was certainly insane.)

WAS BUCKING BAD WEATHER

But for head winds and seas from Suva to port, the S. S. Mowera would have arrived a full day ahead of time yesterday. As it was she came off the port about 10 o'clock last night. There was considerable uncertainty as to what vessel she was, as the steamer is running off her usual schedule. The vessel is fresh from a thorough overhauling. She was 13 weeks at the shipyards at Brisbane. Every part of her that required repairing and overhauling received full attention and the vessel is now said to be in every respect a first-class boat.

She left Sydney November 30, and experienced strong head winds and rough seas to her arrival at Brisbane on December 2. She sailed the following day and arrived at Suva December 7.

The vessel did not remain very long in port. She came into the harbor early this morning and after discharging the few pieces of cargo for Honolulu was ready to sail by noon.

Among the passengers aboard is H. Copeland. He is the agent general in London of New South Wales Colony. He is going to England after conferring with the Colony on business affecting the interests of that division of Australia.

Mr. and Mrs. Shanks are missionaries who are going to stop over at Honolulu for brief visit.

C. Wilson is a sheep dealer. He is going to Canada to arrange about the shipment of wool from Australia.

H. Kerr and family are leaving Australia to settle in America. J. Waddington is a merchant of Montreal who is returning home from a trip to Sydney.

The Mowera sailed a few minutes after noon today for Victoria and Vancouver.
