THE PACIFIC ISLANDS.

Lecture by Mr. John T. Arundel.

Last evening the Y. M. C. A. hall was filled with the most intelligent audience Honolulu can afford, to hear Mr. John T. Arundel, late owner of the steamer Samoa, lecture on "The Pacific Islands." It was a pleasantly spoken relation, in conversational style, of facts acquired mostly by actual observation of the lecturer, full of charming description, touching allusion and engaging incidents.

Mr. Arundel's talk about Samoa was peculiarly interesting to the audience, in view of the Hawaiian Embassy lately landed on that group. Tamasese he facetiously described as a "sort of vice king." Malletoa, the monarch in possession, was a man approaching the description of our Kamehameha I. English naval officers had introduced the game of cricket, and it took finely with the natives, who played not eleven but a hundred on a side. It was the finest thing in the world to get the South Sea Islanders to do anything of a physical nature. A long petition was drawn up to the Queen of England, asking that, if the islands had to give up their independence, they should come under the dominion of Queen Victoria. The German merchants, annoyed at this petition, remonstrated with the chiefs about it, but the only answer they received from the Samoans was that they were not going to do anything until they had received a reply to their petition but to play cricket. Mr. Arundel took the Explorer into the harbor of Pangopango, which he described as a beautiful landlocked sheet resembling a Scotch loch. He wanted to paint the vessel but could not owing to five or six hundred natives swarming on board. Baffled in all designs for getting rid of the swarthy visitors, appeal was finally made to the young and handsome chiefess Munga, about whom a war had since arisen, and the noble lady made proclamation that interdicted all comers from appearing in the harbor next day. Under this tabu the vessel was painted in solitude. Mr. W. H. Webb, owner of the Pacific mail line formerly running, had told him that when the large steamship Nebraska entered Pangopango harbor, notwithstanding the wonderful spectacle a steam vessel of five or six thousand tons was to the native eye, yet it being Sunday, not a single canoe came off—a remarkable tribute to the religious devotion of the people. It may be interesting to the lecturer and his hearers to know that Mr. R. W. Laine, Spanish and Mexican consul here, confirmed this incident to our reporter in the hall last night, he having been on board the Nebraska on that occasion. A strange phenomenon was described, in the appearance once a year, either October or November, of myriads of worms called the "palolo," rising out of the water just before sunrise, which the natives secure in large quantities for food. The appearance of the "palolo" only occurs a few days and ceases the moment the sun rises each day. In the Gilbert Islands the worm also makes its advent, but a few months earlier than in Samoa. Leave was taken of this group in a reference to its future, over which a commission was now sitting in Washington. The Samoans had nothing to fear since they had come under the wings of Hawaii. Coming to Tonga, the venerable King George still lived, although ailing at last accounts. He was over ninety years of age, nearer seven than six feet in height, and a born ruler of men. A complimentary reference was made to the administration of the Rev. Shiley Baker as Prime Minister, although he had been denounced by Sir Arthur Galt inexplicably as a "political missionary." Tonga had a man-of-war, a respectable gunboat bought of England. When King George was invited to go to church the chiefs were in perplexity when they found that the pulpit, being ten feet high, would place the preacher on a higher level than their king. They were equal to the occasion, however, and next Sunday the preacher was amazed to see another pulpit rear itself in the church, into which the king was conducted and where His Majesty occupied a place a foot or two higher than His Reverence. During the Franco-Russian war King George called his parliament together and proclaimed the neutrality of Tonga. The lecturer described the Kermadec islands, lately annexed by England, with their boiling mud fountains, where he had found a Mr. Bell, son of a Yorkshire clergyman, living with his wife and small family all alone. The volcanic lakes burst up on Sunday Island whenever Tongerera in New Zealand is in eruption, showing probability of its having once been joined to that country.

The Society Islands were one of the finest groups in the Pacific, and Tahiti was queen of the Pacific. Pearl shells were found there in large quantities. Rarotonga, whence the Pacific Navigation Company recently obtained a fine lot of sailors was noted for its training school for missionaries, from which there were ten, twelve or twenty volunteers ready to take the place of every missionary that died or was murdered in New Guinea. Missionary devotion was here illustrated by the case of Rev. and Mrs. Chalmers, the wife having left her husband at his New Guinea post while she went to Sydney to recruit but died.

New Caledonia, the French penal colony, with the annoyance it causes Australia, was touched upon; also the New Hebrides, now in dispute between France and England, the Australians urging the latter to resist its acquisition by the former. The division of the Pacific groups for missionary purposes, between different churches, at the suggestion of the noble Bishop Selwyn, of New Zealand, was alluded to; also the pioneer work of the London Missionary Society, that sent John Williams out, together with the Nova Scotia Presbyterian mission, of which John Geddie was the first representative and who, dying at the scene of his labors, had the monument over his grave on Anaitum inscribed, "When he came here there were no Christians; when he went away there were no heathens."

Steamer routes were pointed out, showing that Fiji had a semi-monthly visit from Sydney, and a monthly each from Melbourne and Auckland. The Aucklanders were determined to have as much trade in the Pacific as possible, but it seemed to Mr. Arundel that the Marshall Islands trade belonged naturally to Hawaii. A class becoming very prominent in the Pacific were English noblemen in their yachts, and they took a deep interest in the islands. Lord Pembroke said that all the people of the South Sea Islands were native-born ladies and gentlemen. There were also white adventurers in the islands, such as had gained for white men in the New Hebrides a term signifying "white profligates." Before concluding with a reference to the partition of territory between England and Germany in the Pacific, of which a full account was recently given in the HERALD, the lecturer said: "I do think an immense responsibility rests upon all of us who come to the Pacific, whether we come for money-making or anything else, to throw a high and noble influence over those with whom we have to do. Here in Hawaii you have a much higher civilization than we have down there. But every white man, whether English or French, has great influence, and I do hope that your influence will be exerted more wisely in the future than in the past. England has a great share of control in the South Sea groups and Germany is stretching out her arms." Mr. J. B. Atherton proposed a vote of thanks, which was conveyed to the lecturer by the plaudits of the dispersing audience.

LOCAL NEWS.

Mr. Peterson, the oarsman, is expected to-day. The double entrance to the Oceanic dock is an improvement. "Devil a word out of McGiffin," is what the boys are saying around town. "Yacht," "man-of-war" and "navy" are heard on all sides these days.

The Honolulu Rifles held their weekly drill at their armory last evening. The brigantine I. D. Spreckels will sail for San Francisco on Tuesday next.

The S. S. Alameda, from San Francisco, en route for the Colonies, will be due to-day, with news to the 15th inst.

The appointment of Hon. Geo. E. Richardson as Circuit Judge of Maui in place of Judge Fernander, promoted to the Supreme Bench, is proclaimed.

The assignee's sale of Mr. Jacob Lyons' effects, at his late place of business, begins at ten this morning. Mr. Levey officiating. Particulars in advertisement.

This being Chinese New Year's eve, John should be exhorted to good resolutions, among others that he should avoid the "disease for which opium is the proper remedy."

Signs have been put up in the Station House notifying strangers that they to the Police Court and to the Police Justice's private office, while an elaborate escutcheon, in Stratemyer's best style, stands over the portals of the Marshal's office.

The HERALD acknowledges the receipt of a very generous wedge of bridescake from Mr. and Mrs. James F. Morgan. It is "moighty good atin'," and if its dream-provoking qualities are equal, the HERALD will be inclined to keep Chinese New Year in the land of Nod.

"Oratio" apparently is not acquainted with the circumstances of Mr. Booth's presence here. He was not "called in," but paused to rest in his voyage across the Pacific. When a "stalwart" teetotaler like Mr. Booth begins operations, "Oratio" need not be afraid that the moderate drinkers will be neglected.

The item in yesterday's paper, that Captain Holland, who is master of the Malolo, was going to take the bark Star of Devon to Hongkong, was premature. Captain Lovell, master of the bark, desires for private reasons to remain on shore a while, but the matter will not be settled till he returns from Maui on the Surprise.

Professor Alexander, accompanied by Mr. E. D. Preston, of the United States Coast Survey, went to Pearl River yesterday, where Mr. Preston will commence his observations in determining the exact latitude and longitude of the Islands. The tug Pele was placed at the disposal of the scientific party on which vessel they embarked in the afternoon.

Ah Lin and Ah Tuck were charged with having opium unlawfully in their possession in the Court yesterday morning. After hearing the testimony of several witnesses, Ah Tuck was found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for one year and fined $1,000. Ah Lin was discharged.

Chicago Mail: A Cheyenne clergyman, the Rev. R. E. Field, lectures on the subject, "After Marriage, What?" Sometimes it's poverty, Mr. Field, occasionally divorce, but more frequently paregoric and soothing syrup, croup, mumps and measles. Indeed, there are ever so many things after marriage—numerous old maids, for instance.

For years a loon has had his home on the Schuykill near Philadelphia, but lately it flew into the Zoological Gardens and was captured. Around its neck was a little silver collar on which was engraved "Nemo, the hermit, 1804." The head keeper of the gardens says that he has no doubt about the bird's great age.

MEN AND THINGS.

I find that the previously pretentious Gazette (pretentious formerly to the position of a newspaper, fit for the family residence as well as for the haunts of trade) has degenerated a great deal, of late, and now much of the language used, in its columns, smacks of the familiar slang of the bar-room. Especially I note the writings of "Flaneur." It seems to be the height of the ambition of that writer, and his conferees, to look often "upon the wine when it is red," and to publish his misdemeanors while under the sway of Bacchus. Now there is an opportunity for the members of the W. C. T. U. to undertake a good work. Raid the sanctum of the paper and exert their influence upon that contributor.

Why is it that the newspapers, or at least the newspaper that pretends to understand the desires of the most influential portion of the community, does not come out honestly with its accusations when it has any to make against Government officers? Of what is it afraid? Serious charges of corruption and malfeasance are made weekly, but always in a sort of sub rosa manner that leaves the reader in doubt of exactly who the culprit is that is intended to be held up for public condemnation. When certain actions are stated to be facts, why not turn the rascals' name out in print? Are the insinuations used mainly as a species of blackmail, intended to mean "we know so much, and if—" Or is it only another instance of the "heart of a mouse"?

From various sources I have heard that there has been a fraud committed in the granting of the opium license, but I am not acquainted with any of the details further than the statement that two applicants paid sums required; one obtained the license, his desired quid pro quo for his coin, and the other has, so far, found the thermometer registering about freezing point, which he and his friends regard as very peculiar weather for this climate. Who the perpetrator of this "highway robbery" is I have not heard, although the Gazette states that "rumor also has placed the individual" and there the discreet editor stops.

I have always considered that the course of what is designated sensational journalism lies through blind alleys and back slums that are littered with filth and garbage, which smell putrid and breed pestilence. In other words this sensational journalism, in the hands of boys or hitches, is a synonym for blackguardism. I was led to reflect thus on reading in a newspaper lately the pretended expose of the terrible misdeeds of two young men, both strangers, both of good family, and who had enriched certain "local fast young men" by permitting themselves to be roped in to various gambling games while in the company of supposed gentlemen. Although considerable prominence was given to the names of the visiting and fleeced ones, not even an initial was offered of the local thieves.

That was rather an unwitty, and also unwise, remark in the Bulletin the other day when the proposition was sarcastically advanced to forward Col. Boyd on another annexation expedition, to the newly discovered (so says the Gazette, but I have heard that the discovery was made over a year ago) "Allison" Island, in the South Pacific. Now Col. Boyd is a gentleman, and has, I believe, the respect and good will of all who come in contact with him. In the expedition to Ocean Island he only performed the duties entrusted to him. At this late date, to drink of the mixture of "Gynbergdrinkerstein" and then exude the slime upon Col. Boyd, seems to be the act of either a jealous or spiteful mind.

And now the air is again filled with the exhortations of those good people who have so earnestly and persistently, but here somewhat ineffectually, endeavored to stay the power of the demon Rum. The legions now assembled are led on to the good fight under the marshaling of Mr. R. T. Booth who, I read, has performed almost herculean feats in the Colonies, in subduing the powers of King Alcohol. I wish the new movement success, from my heart, but I respectfully ask them to first charge on the moderate drinkers, gentlemen of standing, whose example is powerful, and endeavor to enroll their names under the temperance banner, for "their name is legion." The drunkards are generally well received by Judge Dayton, who gives them $6 lectures.

Continuing on this subject, of work in aid of the cause of temperance, I would say that it seems to me the action of calling in outside help, in a work of this kind, is displaying a weakness which should not be acknowledged unless the evil got beyond the control of earnest workers in the community. Now I question that our own people have done all in their power; as far as I know their strongest efforts were made through the columns of local newspapers. I would suggest that the members of the W. C. T. U. unite with them and, should their friends use determined efforts to shoulder, use determined efforts to have the laws enacted enforced. Sample the liquors; see that there is no drinking or selling after regulated hours on Sunday; complain of sales made to minors or other restricted persons. Do those things faithfully and earnestly and you will not then need, by obtaining outside help, to give a black-eye as it were, to the yet fairly temperate city of Honolulu.

It has been told to me, originally as a part secret but the taboo has been removed, that the pleasant and powerful Quartermaster General Nowlin is shortly to be relieved from the exacting duties of his position and will be detailed to perform the somewhat pleasant business (to which every son of Mars would only be too happy to be ordered to) of chaperoning two—maybe three—representatives of the Hawaiian "female form divine," during a journey from here to the country which Capt. Celso Cesar Moreno claims as "fatherland" and to that city over which ever turbulent Vesuvius rears its smoking head. General "Sam" will leave here about the end of May, provided there is no slip. On a late occasion the general Sam twanked his little guitar and whistled (for he can't sing):—"I'll hang my hat in King Hamber's hall and have all the fun that I can, I'll take a look in every nook and at the Pope in the Vatican. I'll speak to the friends that Moreno has left, and there have my little say. Merely mention that the ounce that he throw away is as juicy as ever to-day."

Voila tout till Wednesday. ORATIO. The "Explorer."

Yesterday the sale of the steamer Explorer to the Hawaiian Government was completed, the price paid being $20,000. During the afternoon the transfer took place, the British flag being hauled down and the Hawaiian being hoisted in its place. It has not yet definitely transpired what the Government is to make of the vessel. The general impression is that she is to be made a reformatory school ship, and also be despatched to the southern seas, to take the Hawaiian Embassy from Samoa, on the completion of its mission there, to the other groups for which the Embassy is commissioned.

The ceremony of transferring the vessel from British to Hawaiian nationality was somewhat interesting. A boat containing their Excellencies the Minister of Interior, L. Aholo, and Minister of Finance, P. P. Kanoa, Mr. J. A. Hassinger, First Clerk of the Interior Department, and the watchman, Mr. F. Marcos, went off to the vessel. On their approach the British ensign was hoisted aboard the vessel, and as soon as the Hawaiian party had boarded her, the British flag was lowered and the Hawaiian ensign hoisted. After the above ceremonies the party adjourned to the cabin, where the prosperity of the Hawaiian Kingdom was pledged in a bottle of champagne. Mr. F. Marcos was placed in charge of the vessel until other arrangements are made.

Paris and Squares.

Hon. A. S. Cleghorn, having about completed his works of improvement at St. Andrew's Cathedral, Emma Square and the late Queen Emma's town residence, is about turning his attention to Thomas Square. He has had prepared an elegant subscription paper, to be presented to property owners, beginning with those in the vicinity of the square, for the purpose of raising a fund for the erection of a band stand in that beautiful retreat. Liberality in this scheme will do honor to the subscribers, besides doubtless bringing them valuable returns of music with enhanced charms of their surroundings.

With regard to the renovation of the Queen Emma place, it is understood that the Trustees of the Queen's Hospital have conveyed a strip of land fronting on Nuuanu street to the Government, with the stipulation that if the trees thereon be cut down the land reverts to the Hospital trust. It is proposed to allow the native women the privilege of vending leis on this piece of ground, inside the line of the trees. There they will be out of the way of traffic, and be happy in the presence of associations constantly reminding them of the royal and lamented lady who was such a friend to them.

SUPREME COURT.

January Term.

Friday, January 20th, before Chief Justice Judd, foreign jury in attendance. The Court opened at 9:30 a. m., when the trial of Thos. McGiffin, for larceny of about $800 and receiving stolen goods, was resumed.

The prosecution called John Kidwell and Mrs. H. N. McChesney, and then rested.

Mr. Creighton for the defendant moved that the Court direct a verdict for defendant McGiffin, on account of a variance between the proofs and the indictment.

The Attorney General argued against the motion, the Court overruled it and counsel for McGiffin noted exceptions. The defense called Charles Grannis, R. F. Bickerton, David Dayton and J. H. Soper, then rested.

Nothing beyond what is at present known by our readers, material to the case, was elicited on either side. After the noon recess Mr. Creighton addressed the jury for the defense, contending at length that there was no evidence of McGiffin's guilt.

The Attorney General responded on behalf of the Crown, and at 2:47 the Chief Justice charged the jury, reminding them that, according to Anglo-Saxon usage, they were to take nothing for granted, but to find a verdict of guilty must be convinced by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt.

At 3:10 the jury retired and in ten minutes knocked for admittance. They sent up a verdict in writing, finding the prisoner guilty of receiving stolen goods to the value of over $100, knowing them to be stolen.

Mr. Creighton noted exceptions to the verdict on the ground that it was contrary to the evidence, and, further, on account of informality in that there was no verdict given on the first count of larceny.

A. Rosa, Attorney General, for the Crown; A. C. Smith and C. Creighton for the defendant McGiffin; L. A. Thurston in the interest of co-defendant McChesney.

His Honor relieved the foreign jurors from further attendance until Monday, and announced that to-day, Saturday, the Court would hear divorce cases.

THE NEW RULES.

Yesterday the new rules of practice mentioned in the HERALD the other day were promulgated. The first is that stated before, that the several Justices will sit in rotation for one week each, commencing on Monday the 31st day of January.

The second is that all bills in equity shall be directed to the Chief Justice and Chancellor, and must be filed with the clerk, who is to make the summons returnable before the Judge who shall be sitting in Chambers at the expiration of the time limited by the summons, such time being ten days if the defendant resides on Oahu and twenty days if service is made on any of the other Islands.

Application for preliminary injunction or other restraining process shall be made to the Judge sitting at the time, and in all other matters requiring an order the application is to be made likewise. In the absence of any Judge in his rotation, another Judge may take his place with all his powers.

Calculated to Annoy Office Seekers.

Attorney General Cassidy at one time was annoyed very much by people soliciting his influence in securing favors at the State capital. His patience was tried beyond further endurance one morning, and he resolved to resort to a piece of strategy that would possibly suppress the people who troubled him. A man soon afterward entered his office, and introducing himself, said:

"Mr. Cassidy, I believe that if I can secure the favor of your influence—" "What favor?" interrupted Mr. Cassidy, staring at the man.

"There is a vacancy up at the Capitol—" "What Capitol?" Mr. Cassidy again interrupted.

"Why," ejaculated the man, catching his breath, "the State Capitol—" "What State?"

By this time the caller's eyes were beginning to bulge out on his cheeks, and his astonishment was increased by the wild stare of Mr. Cassidy.

"You misapprehend me, I guess," he began, and he shifted his chair closer. "What guess?"

"I guess your are crazy," said the man, warming up, "and I'll not trouble you. Good morning."

"What morning?" whispered Mr. Cassidy, as if his energies were completely exhausted. "You go to the d—l, will you? I guess you haven't got any influence, anyhow."

"What—" But the man slammed the door after him and didn't hear the roar of laughter that followed his departure.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Exciting Runaway.

A remarkable runaway took place from the United Carriage Company's stand about six o'clock last evening. Manuel Reis' hack, No. 121, was standing at the rear of the line, when the telephone rang and Manuel left his rig to answer the call. While he was away his horse started—Manuel says because some lounge hit him with the hand in passing. The horse took the sidewalk for the corner of Messrs. E. O. Hall & Son's store, running between the building and the line of carriages, numbering six or eight. Emerging at the corner, after creating almost a stampede, the runaway bolted down Fort street toward the harbor. It turned on to Queen but struck the curb stone, and careening over the carriage was upset close to the lamp post on the opposite sidewalk. While a crowd was surrounding the equipage, the horse started off again, swinging the carriage on to Fort street and breaking clear, but was stopped before going far. Both shafts of the carriage were broken off and it was otherwise badly damaged. The horse is a spirited animal.

LOADING A BIG SHIP.

AN INTERESTING SPECTACLE AT A NEW YORK WHARF.

A Word About Lighters—The Work of a Stevedore—How the Loading of a Vessel is Conducted—Shipping Merchandise—Heavy Bodies Handled with Ease.

A petroleum broker gets word from a firm in Valparaiso, Chili, that it wants 5,000 gallons of best refined petroleum, but can pay only 23 cents a gallon, delivered. He goes on "Change and finds that the best he can do is to get his oil from a New York company at 16 cents. After talking with this ship agent and that he chooses the most advantageous terms which he can find, which are 5 cents a gallon for freighting. Next he consults an insurance broker and effects an insurance upon his petroleum at a rate which amounts to 1/2 cent per gallon. This leaves him a profit of 1 1/2 cents a gallon, or $75 for his morning work.

Meanwhile the order is being carried out. The oil is in the company's works at Hunter's Point, making that delectable locality odiously odorous. A lighter is sent for it and the 5,000 gallons put on board. This oil may be packed in two different ways—in ordinary barrels or in tin cans holding five gallons each, two of which are boxed in a "case" of this wood. This latter method of packing is employed mainly for fancy brands. A word about lighters: They are broad, blunt-nosed, sloop-rigged boats, all deck except a little hole of a cabin, and used about the harbor for the transportation of merchandise to and from vessels at anchor, or from wharf to wharf. They are thoroughly ill-looking, always in the way, and only to be excused for existing on the score of their great usefulness. The lighters are on the rivers what the carts are on the streets.

LADING THE VESSEL.

The oil safely aboard, the jolly captain and his jolly crew of one set their sail and bowl along at a snail's pace down the East river until they have alongside the Valparaiso ship. Then the jolly captain steers his pipe in his hand and the loading of the oil begins. A huge double pulley, technically known as a block, is suspended between the masts just over the hatchway, and through it is reeved a rope long enough to reach to the deck of the lighter on one side, and through a second block attached to the planking, to a stationary engine on the wharf on the other side. On board the vessel itself a staging is arranged, level with the top of the bulwarks and reaching to the edge of the hatchway, and then the men descend perilous and sliding ladders and appear in the echoing blackness beneath the lowest deck. The oil is now in charge of the stevedore—a man who makes a business of loading and unloading vessels, hiring such laborers as he needs from the crowds of men hanging about the wharves waiting for such chance to earn a dollar, and who are called "longshoremen." All being ready the men on the lighter pile up eight or ten boxes in a double tier, pass around them a fold of rope called a sling, and attach the iron hook at the end of the tackle; the man on the dock whistles a shrill "Go ahead!" to the engineer, whose drum rapidly winds up the rope until the slings of boxes swing over the deck, where it is seized by heavy arms and guided over the hatchway, when, obedient to the signal, "Let go!" the engineer permits his drum to fly back, and the burden drops like a shot to the tune of "Stand under!" There the tackle is quickly unhooked, an empty sling sent up, and then the boxes are rapidly moved away, their number having been recorded by the shipping clerk in his memorandum book.

The object to be attained—the absolute necessity—in showing is to present all jostling between articles of the cargo, and the boxes of oil are crowded in sideways, every crevice being filled with wooden wedges, so that there shall not be the least movement. By this time the men above have filled another sling, the whistle sounds again, the tackle creaks, the "yo-be-e-yo, oh—stand from un-n-der!" is heard, and down comes another dozen cases to help fill the belly of the insatiable monster. When all the boxes are in the hold, the officer in charge of the ship fills out the form of a receipt called a "bill of lading." This is sent to the office of the owners of the oil, and if found correct, several copies are signed by the captain—one for himself, kept by the ship's owners, another for the shipper, and a third, at least, to be sent to the consignee in Valparaiso as a guide to their part of the transaction, for the freightage is paid ordinarily upon delivery of the consignment rather than in advance.

OTHER MERCHANDISE.

The process above described is substantially that used in loading whatever be the merchandise shipped. The main features—staging across the decks, broad gangplanks hung over the ship's side to prevent marring her paint, complicated block tackle and steam engine to wind it or horse power to walk away with it, men to manage the great weight swung about so easily by the tackle—these are always present, and only the details vary. If barrels or the cylindrical iron cases in which caustic soda and other chemicals are packed are to be lifted there are attached to the end of the hoisting rope two iron arms with curved ends, like half-closed fingers which clutch the chains; but often three or four barrels or a heavy hoghead of tobacco or sugar are put in a sling. Bales of cotton, rags, jute, matting, etc., are clutched on opposite sides by grappling hooks similar to those used in handling ice, which dig into their soft sides; but this will not do for bales of cloth, upon which you see printed the warning: "Use no hooks." Iron T rails are caught with clamps just in the middle, and, being thus balanced, are easily guided by one man, and foremost, through a little door in the side of the vessel, and landed on a hand truck, whence they are again swung to their resting place by tackle coming down through the hatchway. Railroad iron is much used for ballast in departing ships. It lies a dead weight, several layers deep, down in the bottom of the hold, and the floors of each of the lower decks are usually paved with a double layer of it, upon which the other cargo is laid. If the merchandise over it is light the rails are fastened down by crosses of timber.

The ease with which exceedingly heavy bodies are handled by the stevedore's men is remarkable. The hatchways are often just large enough to let a package through, and frequently the space between decks is so circumscribed that the men have hardly room to move, yet by skillfully landing the hog-head, or boxed piano, or huge piece of machinery, as it is lowered to them by the tackle, by prying it up and twisting it over with iron bars, pulling it with cotton blocks and pushing it with brawny hands and shoulders, sitting down four or five in a row against a bulkhead and shoving with their feet, they slowly work the unwieldy mass into its corner and brace it firmly by wedges until its successor is placed.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Coal Stolen in Transit.
It is estimated that 60,000 tons of coal are stolen every year from cars in transit. The thefts of coal at one station on a Pennsylvania road amount to about thirty tons every night.—Chicago Times.

LACK OF ENGLISH SMALL PHRASES.

Our Language Well Supplied With Ships But in Need of Light Craft.

The fact is, the English language is well supplied with armored ships. It lacks light cruisers. The very smallest effort of collection will convince us at once of the poverty of the language. Where is the English equivalent of any of the following terms and expressions: Nom de plume, ventro a terre, noblesse oblige, sang froid, racheuse, revenons a nos moutons, raison d'etre, and a hundred others? Where, again is the succinct English, or any English at all, for in quoque, sine qua non, variorum? Looking again, in another direction, we can scarcely expect to find an English synonym for such an un-English condition of existence as dolce far niente. Fancy substituting for tele-tele a conversation limited to two persons—very English, no doubt, but also, and perhaps, a trifle heavy and somewhat circuitous—or for vis inertia—the dictionary explanation "inert property of matter" which might possibly convey something to educated minds! We question whether either would be understood by the common people, and the former certainly has the advantage in point of brevity.

The English language is studded with idioms, expressions and figures of speech confessedly borrowed from our neighbors, ancient and modern, to supply vacant spaces in our own tongue. Some of them, like a e. g., et cetera, vis et cetera, and the like, are universally recognized. Many are in process of absorption. The rest are standing, like eye-minders, on the threshold, awaiting general recognition. If there is a real hiatus, the next generation of dictionaries will take them into their embrace. We describe a person who gets up early as an early riser; but who can find a designation for the corresponding virtue in the old rhyme without circumlocution? As long as there is no expression in our "mother" tongue for a person who goes early to bed, the formation and development of English can not be regarded as final, or all importations ruthlessly condemned.—London World.

Man's Hair Cut with Fire.

There were men and women, small boys and girls of all ages, from 7 up to 45 years, gazing down into the basement barber shop, whose front window was just below. There a middle-aged man, with raven black hair and a pair of lustrous eyes, sat, all gowned and silent, in the barber's chair. But what was the barber doing with his little torch, lighted and flaming, passing it to and fro over the customer's head? That was what puzzled the crowd. That was the thing that attracted a hundred pairs of wondering eyes and caused passers-by to stop and crane their necks up over the shoulders of those who had reached the scene just before them. A street blockade, or possibly a riot, might have resulted if the barber had not soon finished his mysterious task. The flame on the end of the little torch was extinguished, the customer's hair properly oiled and combed, and his check handed to him as he rose from the chair with that furtive, admiring glance into the mirror which every man indulges upon all similar occasions.

"Cutting the gentleman's hair with fire?" exclaimed the barber, as he saw a reporter before him. "Oh, no; that is not what I was doing. I was giving him an anti-bald-headed singe. When a man's hair begins to come out we take a little wax taper, light one end of it and pass the flame over the ends of the hair, as it is held away from the scalp with the comb. By thus singeing the ends of the hairs it is supposed falling out may be prevented, though I don't know how much truth there is in it. Maybe it don't do any good at all, but the barbers can stand it if the customers can. It takes a good half dollar to get a singe like that. New process! Oh, no; it's pretty near as old as the barber business."—Chicago Herald.

A Race Around the World.

The Rev. James L. Hill, of Lynn, sent from that city in the same mail two postal cards so stamped as to go in opposite directions on a race around the world. One was sent via San Francisco to Japan and back by Brindisi and Liverpool, and the other crossed first to England and so around home by Japan and San Francisco. Both travelers returned from their long journey well worn, and well stamped. As the postoffice authorities have prohibited the old time method of getting these curiosities it was necessary to arrange to have the cards restamped and redirected by a friend interested in the project at Kobe, Japan. The card that went around the earth from west to east made the circuit eight days quicker than the other and was eighty-five days on the way. If the authorities had bought elephants and hired special trains, like the hero of Jules Verne's story, the postal card might have saved five days and gone "around the world in eighty days."—Boston Herald.

Fiction and Crime.

A very grave thing is the sanguinary tone of so much French story writing. There is an obvious love of describing brutality for its own sake and laboriously inventing the details of hideous murders. Along with this criminal fiction there is a development of crime which is almost unparalleled, and it is impossible not to see a connection between the two. Some time ago it was calculated that in one month murders had been committed, or at least attempted, at the rate of rather more than one a day. Since then the record has been well kept up. One assassination follows another, and they are adorned with a degree of art which seems to indicate the existence in the mind of the murderer of a certain feeling of emulation. Whenever a ruffian makes his mind up now to kill his mistress he seems to cast about for the most striking and public way of doing it, as if he wished to see whether he or the author of the last tale of horror had the livelier imagination.—Saturday Review.

Human Nature.

There is something queer in the fact that a man does not like to go out of his way. You ask a man how far it is to Greenville, and he tells you ten miles, you can drive that distance and not get particularly tired. But if he tells you that it is four miles, but the river is up and you will have to go two miles out of your way, making eight miles in all, you will think it is the longest eight miles you ever rode in your life. When you get within two miles of Greenville you will say that if you had not had to have gone out of your way you would be there now, and that thought is not conducive to one's patience.—Detroit Free Press.

Evangelist Moody on the Interview.

An interview? Do you know I shrink from them! It looks as if I were magnifying my own importance when I come out and tell what I am going to do and exploit my own acts. The reporter is not to blame, I know; it is the inevitable result of the process of interviewing. Oh, I shrink from interviews as I do from the nightmare.—New York Mail and Express.

For Dead Journalists.

The New York Press club has purchased a handsome plot of ground in Cypress Hill cemetery, and will place a handsome monument in the center to mark the resting place of dead journalists who will be buried there.—Inter-Ocean.

INVITED TO SUBSCRIBE.

Business men are solicited to test the advantages of THE DAILY HERALD as an

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

A large edition will be printed each day, to be circulated in Honolulu and throughout the Islands, regardless of subscriptions, until a regular paying list of subscribers is obtained on the public becoming acquainted with the merits of the paper.

The DAILY HERALD will furnish a fresh and readable record of events in city and country. It will also give, from time to time as received, a summary of the latest news from the outside world, in concise and systematic form.

The DAILY HERALD will follow a straightforward, consistent, independent and moderate course in the discussion of public affairs. It will not be the servile organ of any clique, faction or party. At the same time an earnest support will be given to measures promotive of the public welfare, and to individuals or organizations that may appear in the political field, with claims to popular confidence backed by worthy records and unassailable principles.

The undersigned would, however, rather point to his record as a journalist in this city for the past two years, as conductor of the Daily Bulletin, than make promises that, in general estimation, are valueless until justified by performance. He can only pledge himself to do his best to produce a thorough, an influential, and in every way acceptable, daily newspaper.

Try the "Daily Herald" for a month at least.

THE PACIFIC ISLANDS.

Lecture by Mr. John T. Arundel.

Last evening the Y. M. C. A. hall was filled with the most intelligent audience Honolulu can afford, to hear Mr. John T. Arundel, late owner of the steamer Samoa, lecture on "The Pacific Islands." It was a pleasantly spoken relation, in conversational style, of facts acquired mostly by actual observation of the lecturer, full of charming description, touching allusion and engaging incidents.

Mr. Arundel's talk about Samoa was peculiarly interesting to the audience, in view of the Hawaiian Embassy lately landed on that group. Tamasese he facetiously described as a "sort of vice king," Malietoa, the monarch in possession, was a man approaching the description of our Kamehameha I. English naval officers had introduced the game of cricket, and it took finely with the natives, who played not eleven but a hundred on a side. It was the finest thing in the world to get the South Sea Islanders to do anything of a physical nature. A long petition was drawn up to the Queen of England, asking that, if the islands had to give up their independence, they should come under the dominion of Queen Victoria. The German merchants, annoyed at this petition, remonstrated with the chiefs about it, but the only answer they received from the Samoans was that they were not going to do anything until they had received a reply to their petition but to play cricket. Mr. Arundel took the Explorer into the harbor of Pangopango, which he described as a beautiful landlocked sheet resembling a Scotch loch. He wanted to paint the vessel but could not owing to five or six hundred natives swarming on board. Baffled in all designs for getting rid of the swarthy visitors, appeal was finally made to the young and handsome chief Munga, about whom a war had since arisen, and the noble lady made proclamation that interdicted all comers from appearing in the harbor next day. Under this tabu the vessel was painted in solitude. Mr. W. H. Webb, owner of the Pacific mail line formerly running, had told him that when the large steamship Nebraska entered Pangopango harbor, notwithstanding the wonderful spectacle a steam vessel of five or six thousand tons was to the native eye, yet it being Sunday, not a single canoe came off—a remarkable tribute to the religious devotion of the people. It may be interesting to the lecturer and his hearers to know that Mr. R. W. Laine, Spanish and Mexican consul here, confirmed this incident to our reporter in the hall last night, he having been on board the Nebraska on that occasion. A strange phenomenon was described, in the appearance once a year, either October or November, of myriads of worms called the "palolo," rising out of the water just before sunrise, which the natives secure in large quantities for food. The appearance of the "palolo" only occurs a few days and ceases the moment the sun rises each day. In the Gilbert Islands the worm also makes its advent, but a few months earlier than in Samoa. Leave was taken of this group in a reference to its future, over which a commission was now sitting in Washington. The Samoans had nothing to fear since they had come under the wings of Hawaii.

Coming to Tonga, the venerable King George still lived, although ailing at last accounts. He was over ninety years of age, nearer seven than six feet in height, and a born ruler of men. A complimentary reference was made to the administration of the Rev. Shiley Baker as Prime Minister, although he had been denounced by Sir Arthur Galt inexplicably as a "political missionary." Tonga had a man-of-war, a respectable gunboat bought of England. When King George was invited to go to church the chiefs were in perplexity when they found that the pulpit, being ten feet high, would place the preacher on a higher level than their king. They were equal to the occasion, however, and next Sunday the preacher was amazed to see another pulpit rear itself in the church, into which the king was conducted and where His Majesty occupied a place a foot or two higher than His Reverence. During the Franco-Russian war King George called his parliament together and proclaimed the neutrality of Tonga. The lecturer described the Kermadec islands, lately annexed by England, with their boiling mud fountains, where he had found a Mr. Bell, son of a Yorkshire clergyman, living with his wife and small family all alone. The volcanic lakes burst up on Sunday Island whenever Tongerera in New Zealand is in eruption, showing probability of its having once been joined to that country.

The Society Islands were one of the finest groups in the Pacific, and Tahiti was queen of the Pacific. Pearl shells were found there in large quantities. Rarotonga, whence the Pacific Navigation Company recently obtained a fine lot of sailors was noted for its training school for missionaries, from which there were ten, twelve or twenty volunteers ready to take the place of every missionary that died or was murdered in New Guinea. Missionary devotion was here illustrated by the case of Rev. and Mrs. Chalmers, the wife having left her husband at his New Guinea post while she went to Sydney to recruit but died.

New Caledonia, the French penal colony, with the annoyance it causes Australia, was touched upon; also the New Hebrides, now in dispute between France and England, the Australians urging the latter to resist its acquisition by the former. The division of the Pacific groups for missionary purposes, between different churches, at the suggestion of the noble Bishop Selwyn, of New Zealand, was alluded to; also the pioneer work of the London Missionary Society, that sent John Williams out, together with the Nova Scotia Presbyterian mission, of which John Geddie was the first representative and who, dying at the scene of his labors, had the monument over his grave on Aneiteum inscribed, "When he came here there were no Christians; when he went away there were no heathens."

Steamer routes were pointed out, showing that Fiji had a semi-monthly visit from Sydney, and a monthly each from Melbourne and Auckland. The Aucklanders were determined to have as much trade in the Pacific as possible, but it seemed to Mr. Arundel that the Marshall Islands trade belonged naturally to Hawaii. A class becoming very prominent in the Pacific were English noblemen in their yachts, and they took a deep interest in the islanders. Lord Pembroke said that all the people of the South Sea Islands were native born ladies and gentlemen. There were also white adventurers in the islands, such as had gained for white men in the New Hebrides a term signifying "white profligates."

Before concluding with a reference to the partition of territory between England and Germany in the Pacific, of which a full account was recently given in the HERALD, the lecturer said: "I do think an immense responsibility rests upon all of us who come to the Pacific, whether we come for money-making or anything else, to throw a high and noble influence over those with whom we have to do. Here in Hawaii you have a much higher civilization than we have down there. But every white man, whether English or French, has great influence, and I do hope that your influence will be exerted more wisely in the future than in the past. England has a great share of control in the South Sea groups and Germany is stretching out her arms."

Mr. J. B. Atherton proposed a vote of thanks, which was conveyed to the lecturer by the plaudits of the dispersing audience.

MEN AND THINGS.

I find that the previously pretentious Gazette (pretentious formerly to the position of a newspaper, fit for the family residence as well as for the haunts of trade) has degenerated a great deal, of late, and now much of the language used, in its columns, smacks of the familiar slang of the bar-room.

Why is it that the newspapers, or at least the newspaper that pretends to understand the desires of the most influential portion of the community, does not come out honestly with its accusations when it has any to make against Government officers? Of what is it afraid? Serious charges of corruption and malfeasance are made weekly, but always in a sort of rosa manner that leaves the reader in doubt of exactly who the culprit is that is intended to be held up for public condemnation.

From various sources I have heard that there has been a fraud committed in the granting of the opium license, but I am not acquainted with any of the details further than the statement that two applicants paid sums required, one obtained the license, his desired quid pro quo for his coin, and the other has, so far, found the thermometer registering about freezing point, which he and his friends regard as very peculiar weather for this climate.

I have always considered that the course of what is designated sensational journalism lies through blind alleys and back slums that are littered with filth and garbage, which smell putrid and breed pestilence. In other words this sensational journalism, in the hands of boys or botches, is a synonym for blackguardism.

That was rather an unwitty, and also unwise, remark in the Bulletin the other day when the proposition was sarcastically advanced to forward Col. Boyd on another annexation expedition, to the newly discovered (so says the Gazette, but I have heard that the discovery was made over a year ago) "Allison" Island, in the South Pacific.

And now the air is again filled with the exhortations of those good people who have so earnestly and persistently, but here somewhat ineffectually, endeavored to stay the power of the demon Rum. The legions now assembled are led on to the good fight under the marshalship of Mr. R. T. Booth who, I read, has performed almost herculean feats in the Colonies, in subduing the powers of King Alcohol.

Continuing on this subject, of work in aid of the cause of temperance, I would say that it seems to me the action of calling in outside help, in a work of this kind, is displaying a weakness which should not be acknowledged unless the evil got beyond the control of earnest workers in the community.

For years a loon has had its home on the Schuylkill near Philadelphia, but lately it flew into the Zoological Gardens and was captured. Around its neck was a little silver collar on which was engraved "Nemo, the hermit, 1804." The head keeper of the gardens says that he has no doubt about the bird's great age.

ple the liquors; see that there is no drinking or selling after regulated hours or Sunday; complain of sales made to minors or other restricted persons. Do those things faithfully and earnestly and you will not then need, by obtaining outside help, to give a black-eye as it were, to the yet fairly temperate city of Honolulu.

It has been told to me, originally as a part state secret but the taboo has been removed, that the pleasant and powerful Quartermaster General Nowlein is shortly to be relieved from the exacting duties of his position and will be detailed to perform the somewhat pleasant business (to which every son of Mars would only be too happy to be ordered) to of chaperoning two—maybe three—representatives of the Hawaiian "female form divine," during a journey from here to the country which Capt. Celso Caesar Moreno claims as "faderland" and to that city over which ever turbulent Vesuvius rears its smoking head.

"I'll hang my hat in King Hamber's hall and have all the fun that I can; I'll take a look in every nook, and at the Pope in the Vatican. I'll speak to the friends that Momo has left, and there have my little say. Merely mention that the orange that he throw away is as juicy as ever to-day."

ORATIO.

The "Explorer."

Yesterday the sale of the steamer Explorer to the Hawaiian Government was completed, the price paid being $20,000. During the afternoon the transfer took place, the British flag being hauled down and the Hawaiian being hoisted in its place.

The ceremony of transferring the vessel from British to Hawaiian nationality was somewhat interesting. A boat containing their Excellencies the Minister of Interior, L. Aholo, and Minister of Finance, P. P. Kanou, Mr. J. A. Hassinger, First Clerk of the Interior Department, and the watchman, Mr. F. Marcos, went off to the vessel. On their approach the British ensign was hoisted aboard the vessel, and as soon as the Hawaiian party had boarded her, the British flag was lowered and the Hawaiian ensign hoisted.

Paris and Squares.

Hon. A. S. Cleghorn, having about completed his works of improvement at St Andrew's Cathedral, Emma Square and the late Queen Emma's town residence, is about turning his attention to Thomas Square. He has had prepared an elegant subscription paper, to be presented to property owners, beginning with those in the vicinity of the square, for the purpose of raising a fund for the erection of a band stand in that beautiful retreat.

With regard to the renovation of the Queen Emma place, it is understood that the Trustees of the Queen's Hospital have conveyed a strip of land fronting on Nuuanu street to the Government, with the stipulation that if the trees thereon be cut down the land reverts to the Hospital trust. It is proposed to allow the native women the privilege of vending leis on this piece of ground, inside the line of the trees. There they will be out of the way of traffic, and be happy in the presence of associations constantly reminding them of the royal and lamented lady who was such a friend to them.

SUPREME COURT.

January Term.

Friday, January 20th, before Chief Justice Judd, foreign jury in attendance. The Court opened at 9:30 a. m., when the trial of Thos. McGiffin, for larceny of about $800 and receiving stolen goods, was resumed.

The prosecution called John Kidwell and Mrs. H. N. McChesney, and then rested.

Mr. Creighton for the defendant moved that the Court direct a verdict for defendant McGiffin, on account of a variance between the proofs and the indictment.

The Attorney General argued against the motion, the Court overruled it and counsel for McGiffin noted exceptions. The defense called Charles Grannis, R. F. Bickerton, David Dayton and J. H. Soper, then rested.

Nothing beyond what is at present known by our readers, material to the case, was elicited on either side.

After the noon recess Mr. Creighton addressed the jury for the defense, contending at length that there was no evidence of McGiffin's guilt.

The Attorney General responded on behalf of the Crown, and at 2:47 the Chief Justice charged the jury, reminding them that, according to Anglo-Saxon usage, they were to take nothing for granted, but to find a verdict of guilty must be convinced by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt.

At 3:10 the jury retired and in ten minutes knocked for admittance. They sent up a verdict in writing, finding the prisoner guilty of receiving stolen goods to the value of over $100, knowing them to be stolen.

Mr. Creighton noted exceptions to the verdict on the ground that it was contrary to the evidence, and, further, on account of informality in that there was no verdict given on the first count of larceny.

A. Rosa, Attorney General, for the Crown; A. C. Smith and C. Creighton for the defendant McGiffin; L. A. Thurston in the interest of co-defendant McChesney.

His Honor relieved the foreign jurors from further attendance until Monday, and announced that to-day, Saturday, the Court would hear divorce cases.

THE NEW RULES.

Yesterday the new rules of practice mentioned in the HERALD the other day were promulgated. The first is that stated before, that the several Justices will sit in rotation for one week each, commencing on Monday the 31st day of January.

The second is that all bills in equity shall be directed to the Chief Justice and Chancellor, and must be filed with the clerk, who is to make the summons returnable before the Judge who shall be sitting in Chambers at the expiration of the time limited by the summons, such time being ten days if the defendant resides on Oahu and twenty days if service is made on any of the other islands.

Application for preliminary injunction on other restraining process shall be made to the Judge sitting at the time, and in all other matters requiring an order the application is to be made likewise. In the absence of any Judge in his rotation, another Judge may take his place with all his powers.

Calculated to Annoy Office Seekers.

Attorney General Cassidy at one time was annoyed very much by people soliciting his influence in securing favors at the State capital. His patience was tried beyond further endurance one morning, and he resolved to resort to a piece of strategy that would possibly suppress the people who troubled him. A man soon afterward entered his office, and introducing himself, said:

"Mr. Cassidy, I believe that if I can secure the favor of your influence—"

"What favor?" interrupted Mr. Cassidy, staring at the man.

"There is a vacancy up at the Capitol—"

"What Capitol?" Mr. Cassidy again interrupted.

"Why," ejaculated the man, catching his breath, "the State Capitol—"

"What State?"

By this time the caller's eyes were beginning to bulge out on his cheeks, and his astonishment was increased by the wild stare of Mr. Cassidy.

"You misapprehend me, I guess," he began, and he shifted his chair closer.

"What guess?"

"I guess your are crazy," said the man, warming up, "and I'll not trouble you. Good morning."

"What morning?" whispered Mr. Cassidy, as if his energies were completely exhausted.

"You go to the d—l, will you? I guess you haven't got any influence, anyhow."

"What—"

But the man slammed the door after him and didn't hear the roar of laughter that followed his departure.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Exciting Runaway.

A remarkable runaway took place from the United Carriage Company's stand about six o'clock last evening. Manuel Reis' hack, No. 127, was standing at the rear of the line, when the telephone rang and Manuel left his rig to answer the call. While he was away his horse started—Manuel says because some loungee hit him with the hand in passing. The horse took the sidewalk for the corner of Messrs. E. O. Hall & Son's store, running between the building and the line of carriages, numbering six or eight. Emerging at the corner, after creating almost a stampede, the runaway bolted down Fort street toward the harbor. It turned on to Queen but struck the curb stone, and careening over the carriage was upset close to the lamp post on the opposite sidewalk. While a crowd was surrounding the equipage, the horse started off again, swinging the carriage on to Fort street and breaking clear, but was stopped before going far. Both shafts of the carriage were broken off and it was otherwise badly damaged. The horse is a spirited animal.

LOADING A BIG SHIP.

AN INTERESTING SPECTACLE AT A NEW YORK WHARF.

A Word About Lighters—The Work of a Stevedore—How the Loading of a Vessel is Conducted—Shipping Merchandise. Heavy Bodies Hauled with Ease.

A petroleum broker gets word from a firm in Valparaiso, Chili, that it wants 5,000 gallons of best refined petroleum, but can pay only 35 cents a gallon, delivered. He goes on "Change and finds that the best he can do is to get his oil from a New York company at 10 cents. After talking with this ship agent and that he chooses the most advantageous terms which he can find, which are 5 cents a gallon for freighting. Next he consults an insurance broker and effects an insurance upon his petroleum at a rate which amounts to 1/2 cent per gallon. This leaves him a profit of 1 1/2 cents a gallon, or $75 for his morning work.

Meanwhile the order is being carried out. The oil is in the company's works at Hunter's Point, making that delectable locality odiously odorous. A lighter is sent for it and the 5,000 gallons put on board. This oil may be packed in two different ways—in ordinary barrels or in tin cans holding five gallons each, two of which are boxed in a "case" of thin wood. This latter method of packing is employed mainly for fancy brands. A word about lighters: They are broad, blunt-nosed, sloop-rigged boats, all deck except a little hole of a cabin, and used about the harbor for the transportation of merchandise to and from vessels at anchor, or from wharf to wharf. They are thoroughly ill-looking, always in the way, and only to be excused for existing on the score of their great usefulness. The lighters are on the rivers that carts are on the streets.

LADING THE VESSEL.

The oil safely aboard, the jolly captain and his jolly crew of one set their sail and bowl along at a snail's pace down the East river until they have alongside the Valparaiso ship. Then the jolly captain sticks his pipe in his husband and the loading of the oil begins. A huge double pulley, technically known as a block, is suspended between the masts just over the hatchway, and through it is reeved a rope long enough to reach to the deck of the lighter on one side, and through a second block attached to the planking, to a stationary engine on the wharf on the other side. On board the vessel itself a staging is arranged, level with the top of the bulwarks and reaching to the edge of the hatchway, and then the men descend perilous and shaking ladders and disappear in the echoing blackness beneath the lowest deck. The oil is now in charge of the stevedore—a man who makes a business of loading and unloading vessels, hiring such laborers as he needs from the crowds of men hanging about the wharves waiting for such chance to earn a dollar, and who are called "longshoremen." All being ready the men on the lighter pile up eight or ten boxes in a double tier, pass around them a fold of rope called a sling, and attach the iron hook at the end of the tackle; the man on the dock whistles a shrill "Go ahead!" to the engineer, whose drum rapidly winds up the rope until the slingful of boxes swings over the deck, when it is seized by braveny arms and guided over the hatchway, when, obedient to the signal, "Let go!" the engineer permits his drum to fly back, and the burden drops like a shot to the tune of "Stand from under!" There the tackle is quickly unhooked, an empty sling sent up, and then the boxes are rapidly shoved away, their number having been recorded by the shipping clerk in his memorandum book.

The object to be attained—the absolute necessity of stowing is to prevent all jostling between articles of the cargo, and the boxes of oil are crowded in sidewise, any way to hold them tightly together, every crevice being filled with wooden wedges, so that there shall not be the least movement. By this time the men above have filled another sling, the whistle sounds again, the tackle creaks, the "yo-he-e-ye, oh—stand from un-n-d-er!" is heard, and down comes another dozen cases to help fill the belly of the insatiable monster. When all the boxes are in the hold, the officer in charge of the ship fills out the form of a receipt called a "bill of lading." This is sent to the office of the owners of the oil, and if found correct, several copies are signed by the captain—one for himself, kept by the ship's owners, another for the stevedore, and a third, at least, to be sent to the consignee in Valparaiso as a guide to their part of the transaction, for the freightage is paid ordinarily upon delivery of the consignment rather than in advance.

OTHER MERCHANDISE.

The process above described is substantially that used in loading whatever be the merchandise shipped. The main features—staging across the deck, broad gangplanks hung over the ship's side to prevent marring her paint, complicated block tackle and steam engine to wind it or horse power to walk away with it, men to manage the great weight swung about, so easily by the tackle—these are always present, and only the details vary. If barrels or the cylindrical iron cases in which caustic soda and other chemicals are packed are to be lifted there are attached to the end of the hoisting rope two iron arms with curved ends, like half-closed fingers which clutch the chains; but often three or four barrels or a heavy hoghead of tobacco or sugar are put in a sling. Bales of cotton, rags, jute, matting, etc., are clutched on opposite sides by grappling hooks similar to those used in handling ice, which dig into their soft sides; but this will not do for bales of cloth, upon which you see printed the warning: "Use no hooks." Iron T rails are caught with clamps just in the middle, and, being thus balanced, are easily guided by one man, end foremost, through a little door in the side of the vessel, and landed on a hand truck, whence they are again swung to their resting place by tackle coming down through the hatchway. Railroad iron is much used for ballast in departing ships. It lies a dead weight, several layers deep, down in the bottom of the hold, and the floors of each of the lower decks are usually paved with a double layer of it, upon which the other cargo is laid. If the merchandise over it is light the rails are fastened down by cross ties of timber.

The ease with which exceedingly heavy bodies are handled by the stevedore's men is remarkable. The hatchways are often just large enough to let a package through, and frequently the space between decks is so circumscribed that the men have hardly room to move, yet by skillfully landing the hoghead, or boxed piano, or huge piece of machinery, as it is lowered to them by the tackle, by prying it up and twisting it over with iron bars, pulling it with cotton hooks and pushing it down with braveny hands and shoulders, sitting in four rows or five in a row against a bulkhead and shoving with their feet, they slowly work the unwieldy mass into its corner and brace it firmly by wedges until its successor is placed.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Coal Stolen in Transit.

It is estimated that 60,000 tons of coal are stolen every year from cars in transit. The thefts of coal at one station on a Pennsylvania road amount to about thirty tons every night.—Chicago Times.

LACK OF ENGLISH SMALL PHRASES.

Our Language Well Supplied With Ships But in Need of Light Craft.

The fact is, the English language is well supplied with armored ships. It lacks light craft. The very smallest effort of recollection will convince us at once of the poverty of the language. Where is the English equivalent of any of the following terms and expressions: Nom de plume, ventre a terre, noblese oblige, sang froid, rachauffe, revensons a nos moutons, raison d'etre, and a hundred others? Where, again is the succinct English, or any English at all, for tu quoque, sine qua non, variorum? Looking again, in another direction, we can scarcely expect to find an English synonym for such an un-English condition of existence as dolce far niente. Fancy substituting for tele-a-tele "a conversation limited to two persons"—very English, no doubt, but also, and perhaps, a trifle heavy and somewhat circuitous—or for vis inertia—the dictionary explanation "inert property of matter" which might possibly convey something to educated minds! We question whether either would be understood by the common people, and the former certainly has the advantage in point of brevity.

The English language is studded with idioms, expressions and figures of speech confessedly borrowed from our neighbors, ancient and modern, to supply vacant spaces in our own tongue. Some of them, like e. g., et cetera, vis a vis and the like, are universally recognized. Many are in process of absorption. The rest are standing, like ivory maidens, on the threshold, awaiting general recognition. If there is a real hiatus, the next generation of dictionaries will take them into their embrace. We describe a person who gets up early as an early riser; but who can find a designation for the corresponding virtue in the old rhyme without circumlocution? As long as there is no expression in our "mother" tongue for a person who goes early to bed, the formation and development of English can not be regarded as final, or all importations ruthlessly condemned.—London World.

Man's Hair Cut with Fire.

There were were men and women, small boys and girls of all ages, from 7 up to 43 years, gazing down into the basement barber shop, whose front window was just below. There a middle-aged man, with raven black hair and a pair of lustrous eyes, sat, all gowned and silent, in the barber's chair. But what was the barber doing with his little torch, lighted and flaming, passing it to and fro over the customer's head? That was what puzzled the crowd. That was the thing that attracted a hundred pairs of wondering eyes and caused passers-by to stop and crane their necks up over the shoulders of those who had reached the scene just before them. A street blockade, or possibly a riot, might have resulted if the barber had not soon finished his mysterious task. The flame on the end of the little torch was extinguished, the customer's hair properly oiled and combed, and his cheek handed to him as he rose from the chair with that furtive, admiring glance into the mirror which every man indulges upon all similar occasions.

"Cutting the gentleman's hair with fire!" exclaimed the barber, as he saw a reporter before him. "Oh, no, that is not what I was doing. I was giving him an anti-bald-headed singe. When a man's hair begins to come out we take a little wax taper, light one end of it and pass the flame over the ends of the hair, as it is held away from the scalp with the comb. By thus singeing the ends of the hairs it is supposed falling out may be prevented, though I don't know how much truth there is in it. Maybe it don't do any good at all, but the barbers can stand it if the customers can. It takes a good half dollar to get a singe like that. New process! Oh, no; it's pretty near as old as the barber business."—Chicago Herald.

A Race Around the World.

The Rev. James I. Hill, of Lynn, sent from that city in the same mail two postal cards so stamped as to go in opposite directions on a race around the world. One was sent via San Francisco to Japan and back by Brindisi and Liverpool, and the other crossed first to England and so around home by Japan and San Francisco. Both travelers returned from their long journey well worn and well stamped. As the postoffice authorities have prohibited the old time method of getting these curiosities it was necessary to arrange to have the cards restamped and redirected by a friend interested in the project at Kobe, Japan. The card that went around the earth from west to east made the circuit eight days quicker than the other and was eighty-five days on the way. If the authorities had bought elephants and hired special trains, like the hero of Jules Verne's story, the postal card might have saved five days and gone "around the world in eighty days."—Boston Herald.

Fiction and Crime.

A very grave thing is the sanguinary tone of so much French story writing. There is an obvious love of describing brutality for its own sake and laboriously inventing the details of hideous murders. Along with this criminal fiction there is a development of crime which is almost unparalleled, and it is impossible not to see a connection between the two. Some time ago it was calculated that in one month murders had been committed, or at least attempted, at the rate of rather more than one a day. Since then the record has been well kept up. One assassination follows another, and they are adorned with a degree of art which seems to indicate the existence in the mind of the murderer of a certain feeling of simulation. Whenever a ruffian makes his mind up now to kill his mistress he seems to cast about for the most striking and public way of doing it, as if he wished to see whether he or the author of the last tale of horror had the livelier imagination.—Saturday Review.

Human Nature.

There is something queer in the fact that a man does not like to go out of his way. You ask a man how far it is to Greenville, and he tells you ten miles, you can drive that distance and not get particularly tired. But if he tells you that it is four miles, but the river is up and you will have to go two miles out of your way, making eight miles in all, you will think it is the longest eight miles you ever rode in your life. When you get within two miles of Greenville you will say that if you had not had to have gone out of your way you would be there now, and that thought is not conducive to one's patience.—Detroit Free Press.

Evangelist Moody on the Interview.

An interview! Do you know I shrink from them! It looks as if I were magnifying my own importance when I come out and tell what I am going to do and exploit my own acts. The reporter is not to blame, I know; it is the inevitable result of the process of interviewing. Oh, I shrink from interviews as I do from the nightmare.—New York Mail and Express.

For Dead Journalists.

The New York Press club has purchased a handsome plot of ground in Cypress Hill cemetery, and will place a handsome monument in the center to mark the resting place of dead journalists who will be buried there.—Inter-Ocean.
